Mid-West Fears Worst Drought In U. S. History

U. S. Agencies Combine to Battle a Disaster Eclipsing 1934's.

Millions at Stake In Farm Incomes

By Gerald G. Gross.

While parched grazing and crop lands of the Western plains withered in 100-degree temperatures, the Federal Government yesterday began marshalling its relief resources in anticipation of a widespread drought which threatens to eclipse the record-breaker of 1934.

The Works Progress Administration, Resettlement Administration, Agricultural Adjustment Administration and Interstate Commerce Commission—all moved to confront the peril as dispatches telling of ruined grain crops, exhausted pasturage and thirst-maddened cattle poured into the Capital from the Dakotas, Wyoming, Montana, Minnesota and other affected States. Hundreds of millions in farm income are at stake.

With Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and Administrator Howard Tolley in Philadelphia, AAA spokesmen here indicated a crop insurance plan would be offered farmers, enabling them to apply all or part of their soil conservation benefit checks as premiums for protection against "act of God" disasters, including drought.

Conference Set Tuesday.

Simultaneously, Harry L. Hopkins, WPA administrator, ordered subordinate officials from the drought area to confer with him in St. Paul Tuesday, when a relief program will be drafted. Howard Hunter, assistant administrator, declared that the Resettlement Administration, which already is taking stock of damage, will co-operate with WPA.

Earlier in the day the Interstate Commerce Commission authorized emergency freight rates to transfer to greener pastures livestock whose grazing lands have been wiped out by the heat and lack of rain. For cattle, calves, hogs, sheep and goats, the new schedule is 85 per cent of the regular rate for shipment to feeding points and 15 per cent for the return trip. Special rates also were authorized for horses and mules.

J. B. Kincer, chief of the Weather Bureau's division of climate and crop weather, was pessimistic as he surveyed dispatches telling of temperature readings over 100 in North Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas and other Great Plains and "typical prairie States" which feed the Nation.

Spring Wheat Ruined.

Extremely hot weather, combined with a serious rainfall deficiency and hot winds, already has ruined what would have been an excellent crop of spring wheat in North and South Dakota, and pasture lands from the Canadian border to central Texas have been badly damaged.

With the drought of 1934, worst in this country's history, still fresh in the minds of millions of farmers reduced to penury by that whim of Nature, here is a general picture of the situation now confronting their rehabilitated holdings:

Between April 1 and 8 a. m. yesterday the rainfall in northern Minnesota was only 26 per cent of normal, 27 per cent in eastern North Dakota, 22 per cent in eastern Kansas, 21 per cent in southern Missouri, 21 per cent in Tennessee, 15 per cent in central and eastern Texas, 40 per cent in eastern Montana and 32 per cent in western Arkansas.

Heat, accomplice of lack of rain in the production of droughts, has sent the mercury soaring to extreme highs, especially this week. For the week ended June 23 the average temperatures throughout the Missouri and Ohio valleys and the Mountain States were anywhere from 1 to 11 degrees above normal. And in the last few days, when 100 to 114 degree readings have been commonplace, the gap has been widened still further. With grazing land, burnt by a merciless sun and utterly without moisture, becoming

William A. (Dutch) Kappel, 34, indicted by the District Grand Jury on a charge of first degree murder in the slaying of Elizabeth R. Lynch, telephone operator, last autumn, stepped from the District Jail a free man last night after the charge against him had been nolle prossed.

The nolle prosse order releasing Kappel was signed by Miss B. E. Nathan, an assistant to Frank E. Cunningham, clerk of the District Supreme Court.

Assistant United States Attorney Roger Robb, assigned to prosecute Kappel, moved for the nolle prosequi.

Evidence Insufficient.

He wrote on the back of the order freeing Kappel that he felt evidence against the prisoner was insufficient for presentation to a jury in District Supreme Court.

Kappel was arrested shortly after Miss Lynch, a telephone operator at the private switchboard of the Potomac Electric Power Co., was found shot to death in the kitchen of her home in the 900 block of Fourth street northeast. A bullet hole was in her head. Some broken chairs were found in the kitchen, and beside her body was a small revolver.

Police took Kappel, a roomer at the Fourth street house, into custody, and said later that he admitted ownership of the revolver.

He remained in jail until he was indicted for first degree murder by the District grand jury. Since then his attorneys have tried to obtain his release.

"The case was discussed some time ago," asserted United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett last night.

"The nolle prosequi, I'm certain, is because we didn't have sufficient evidence against Kappel."

Maj. Ernest W. Brown expressed amazement at Kappel's release.

"It's astonishing," he said last night.

Gift of $142,635 Baffles Druggist

Mize, Miss., June 26 (U.P.).—Roy W. Ford tonight waited expectantly to find out if he would be permitted to spend $142,635 which came to him in the mail—from where or why, no one could figure out.

Thursday morning's mail brought Ford, the 43-year-old druggist of this south Mississippi town of fewer than 1,000 people, a large envelope containing $142,634 in British Columbia, Canada, bonds. The envelope was addressed correctly to Ford.

Ford knew of no reason why he should receive the bonds, and no explanation accompanied them.

Amazed, the druggist submitted the matter to the Postoffice Department. The bonds first were sent to Chattanooga and tonight were reported en route to postal inspectors in New Orleans.

Sheiks Ready To Aid Arabs; War Impends

100,000 Want to Cross Jordan to Join Fight on Jews, British.

Ruler Clashes With Son; Bands Wreck Train; Battle Follows.

By the Associated Press.

Amman, Transjordan, June 26.—Fierce desert warfare threatened tonight as 100,000 Bedouins urged a march across the River Jordan to the aid of their blood brothers, the Arabs of Palestine.

A meeting of desert sheiks resulted in a decision to tell their ruler, the Emir Abdullah, of Transjordan, British-mandated kingdom, they are ready to join Arabs of Palestine in their guerrilla warfare against the Jews and the British.

The Emir and his own family are divided in the face of the greatest crisis since this desert nation was carved out after the World War.

Thus far the Emir has confined himself to the role of offering advice favoring peace.

Offers His Advice.

Sipping coffee while sitting with an Associated Press correspondent in a tiny office of his palace, the worn leader declared:

"I have offered my advice only. I have not tried and I do not want to attempt more."

Abdullah is a stanch friend of Great Britain. As Emir he receives a salary of £14,000 (about $70,000) annually.

The mild, soft-spoken ruler of 300,000 persons, a majority of whom are Bedouins, desert herders and fighters, in seeking to hold the country on the side of peace was rumored to have clashed with his son and heir, Crown Prince Talal. Talal, who was educated at Oxford, espouses the Arab cause as vigorously and as openly as his father advises caution and respect to British policy across the River Jordan.

Independent Government.

(Transjordan is covered by the League mandate which gave Great Britain control over Palestine, but in 1928 an agreement was signed whereby Britain recognizes the existence of an independent government in Transjordan under the rule of the Emir Abdullah. A condition was interposed that Britain's international obligations must be respected. The British high commissioner for Palestine also is commissioner for Transjordan.)

After a meeting by 200 sheiks, leaders of desert tribes, one of them said:

"We must go to the aid of Arabs in Palestine. We are all one people. These are our lands.

"Freedom for Transjordan is useless without freedom for Palestine. Talk and strikes have won nothing. We must cross the Jordan and win Palestine back from the Jews and the British."

Another sheik said:

"We will warn the Emir the Arabs of Palestine must be given freedom and liberated from Jewish dominance within ten days or we will go and free them ourselves."

British Are Stirred.

London, June 26 (AP).—A new danger arose on the deserts of Transjordan tonight to plague British officials, already sorely vexed by their Palestine powder keg.

Arab discontent, fanned into open rebellion with bombs and bullets in the Holy Land, spread across the Jordan to find sheiks threatening to go to the assistance of their blood brothers in Palestine.

The British contended they were prepared for any eventuality.

On the surface this preparedness consisted of approximately 15,000 regular troops, backed by minor units such as the camel corps, the frontier guards and regular police.

British armaments were vastly superior to any the Arabs might summon to their cause.

Heavy Casualties.

Jerusalem, June 26 (AP).—Heavy casualties were reported in a battle which followed upon the wrecking of a train by Arabs today on the Jerusalem-Haifa-Tydda line.

The engineer and a soldier were killed in the wreck. Soldiers convoying the train opened an attack and British officers said they believed Arab casualties were numerous.

Three Arabs were believed to have been killed in an engagement early today in the Nablus district.

Nazis Attack League, Demand End of Supervision of Danzig

By the Associated Press.

Free City of Danzig, June 26.—A Nazi declaration of independence amounting to a virtual demand that the League of Nations withdraw its supervision from Danzig will be published here and throughout Germany simultaneously tomorrow.

The statement will be issued by Albert Forster, youthful Danzig Nazi chieftain. It bitterly assails Sean Lester, high commissioner, and states the League has become "superfluous in Danzig's affairs."

"The League and its high commissioner in Danzig have nothing more to do with settling differences in Danzig and Poland, and their existence on the whole has become superfluous," the declaration says.

Forster's sharpness aroused speculation as to the full meaning of the declaration.

"Important impending events" have been rumored for days in the Free City.

The ship's officers yesterday deliberately omitted High Commissioner Lester when making their customary official calls upon authorities.

Forster says the statement to be issued is an explanation why Lester was snubbed by the officers.

The declaration adds:

"The chief task of the Danzig high commissioner was to straighten out trouble in Danzig and Poland. So now the high commissioner believes it is necessary to justify his

Roosevelt Nominated by Acclamation; His Platform Views Awaited Tonight; Women Find Their Demands Omitted

'Gentle Jim' Farley Cajoles Feminists

Beguiles Them With His Flattery at 'Beautiful Breakfast.'

By Agnes E. Meyer.
Condensation Bureau of The Post.

Philadelphia, June 26.—Although this story is about women in relation to the Democratic platform, its title should be "Gentle Jim." What the usually astute feminine troupers of this great circus forget is that while the President is hypnotizing them by putting on his great humanitarian act, Jim Farley is deftly picking their pockets, politically speaking.

The business of taking the women for a ride is not a new one to politicians, but the Republicans have always resorted to old-fashioned masculine brusqueness, which leaves the victims sore and rebellious, whereas Jim hands out candy all around and makes everybody happy and even ecstatic.

Anybody watching him gum-shoe around in his knowing way among the New Deal uplifters has to admit that he is the No. 1 political operator in this country today. Incidentally, uplift at this convention is exclusively represented by women, for the male contingent—Tugwell, Harry Hopkins, Aubrey Williams, etc.—has not been allowed to appear under the convention spotlights.

Until the resolutions committee brought in its report yesterday, one really got the impression at this convention that women were going to be allowed to function in the development of a New Deal philosophy when and if it materializes.

Overrun With Beauties.

There are so many women delegates, the convention hall is overrun with Southern beauties—that the resolutions committee was expanded to admit alternates "of the opposite sex." The feminine leaders under the chairmanship of Mrs. Caroline O'Day had spent weary hours toiling over a well-written platform of their own—and then—bang—the real platform come out without so much as a splinter, to say nothing of a whole plank that could be identified as having been originated by the female "brain trust."

The Democratic resolutions prove conclusively that there isn't a woman in the Democratic Party who influences Democratic, or should one say, New Deal policy.

In fact, the one reference to the sex is of a suspiciously Hitlerian back-to-the-kitchen connotation. It occurs under the labor division and declares that "we have undertaken to put an end to the sweated labor of his (the workingman's) wife and children."

Failure Called Ominous.

When one thinks of the many serious threats that have developed of late to the position of woman as a wage-earner, this failure to lend support to women in their own peculiar problems is ominous and completely unexpected.

Miss Mary Dewson, chairman of the women's division, who can always be counted upon to meet any difficult situation, immediately put out a statement that of course the whole platform could be applied to women.

"That's wonderful," she said.

"At last we have become people."

This statement will please the small minority who have the equal rights point of view of the Woman's Party, but it is bound to disappoint the millions of women who belong to the Business and Professional Women's League, the League of Women Voters and other organizations that have been fighting for special legislation to protect women in industry and to kill the famou "Article 213" which discriminates against married women in the Federal service.

To be sure there are pronouncements in the platform on the maintenance of peace and the extension of the merit system through Civil Service but these declarations are much too vague and too little implemented to suit not only the feminist groups but even the Democratic women who have made a study of these two questions.

Since the record of the Democratic Party is such a flagrant one as regards Civil Service, the League of Women Voters which has been fighting for two years for a restitu-

A posse of prison guards, aided by bloodhounds, searched the woods of Fairfax County last night for two short - term convicts, who walked away from the penal farm near Occoquan Reformatory yesterday afternoon.

The fugitives are Elmer Day and Ray Fisk. Both, according to Capt. M. M. Barnard, general superintendent, were serving time for petty larceny. Day's term was three to six months, and Fisk's six months to a year.

It was believed last night the men were in hiding in the wooded section near Springfield.

Leaders of Labor, Farmers Pleased

By Robert C. Albright.
A Staff Correspondent.

Philadelphia, June 26.—Liberal New Deal delegates, punch-drunk with convention ardor, greeted the 1936 Democratic platform today with extravagant phrases, while those few conservative colleagues still in town acquiesced or praised with measured words.

Organized labor was satisfied, farm leaders moderately so, while bankers, grateful for suppression of the direct inflationary note, yet looked askance at managed currency implications of the finance plank.

A close check revealed that differences still existed among leaders over the wisdom of a declaration for a constitutional amendment if needed to assure both State and Federal governments the power to regulate commerce and legislate for economic security.

The opinion among observers here was that while covering a broad field of interests and activities, and providing some sort of recognition for nearly every liberal field of endeavor, so general are many of the planks that they must be clarified by the President's own personal interpretation.

May Reveal His Course.

This was the course taken by Gov. Alf Landon when he found some planks in the Republican platform not susceptible to specific purpose. The President could avail himself of tomorrow night's Franklin Field address to make his purpose plain.

Farm leaders, while pleased that most of their recommendations were adopted in whole or in part, illustrated this point by making plain that they are awaiting Administration interpretations on at least two of the farm planks.

Edward A. O'Neal, of the American Farm Bureau Federation, pointed out that the production control plank "seemed to promise" fair prices to consumers at a "fair profit to the farmers."

"Less liable to misinterpretation," said O'Neal, "and more easily understood by the farmers, would have been 'ample supplies to consumers at parity prices to consumers.' We will await the Administration's interpretation of this phrase."

O'Neal's organization had asked a managed currency.

He commented:

"If the platform for a 'permanently sound currency so stabilized as to prevent the former wide fluctuations in values' means this, and we understand that it does, then it is in line with our policy. Interpretation here again is all important."

Pleased With Revision.

The farm spokesmen appeared pleased that the farm plank was revised at the last minute to give them production control, commodity loans, soil conservation, protection against dumping, expansion of foreign and domestic markets, regulation of monopolies, and aid for cooperatives.

They would have preferred a stronger pledge to lower industrial tariffs, and found some fault with the farm credit plank for not pledging farmer control.

John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Workers, lavished praise on the labor plank, and President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, while he did not get much that he asked, thought it was a "good platform."

"The platform is one that meets with the approval of organized labor," said Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor.

Even Senator Guffey, of Pennsylvania, whose United Mine Worker bill for control of the bituminous coal industry died with the last Congress, and who did not gain specific recognition of coal regula-

Tumult and Shouting Goes On; Rally Nurtures 'Hoopla' Fever

Democrats, Tireless, Continue Bedlam Into Morning Hours, Despite 5 Days' Ordeal; Convention, Now Free, Is Worth $20 a Seat as Show.

By Sidney Olson,
A Staff Correspondent.

Philadelphia, June 26.—It's already Saturday morning by Philadelphia's daylight time, and several thousand Democrats whose shoes are full of feet and whose lungs ache like dying teeth from five days and nights of shouting are still parading, every ache forgotten in their glorious relief that President Roosevelt at last has been nominated.

For they have yelled religiously every single one of the thousands of times his name has been mentioned in these five days, their throats iron, their joints tireless, their eyes glowing hot with fervor.

This is a recurrent fever that strikes this sea of open faces, a fever carefully marshaled and arranged, with head ushers at the top of the aisle to route the marching groups and to see that each marcher has a horn or other noisemaker and actually is blowing it.

This convention has now become worth at least $20 a seat of any man's money. The fact that it is free and that the doors have been thrown open to the Philadelphia populace since the first sessions failed to fill the house, has no bearing on the worth of the show. It's terrific.

There are few things funnier than the expression of a very weary delegate who has held a banner aloft for two hours waiting for a chance to demonstrate. The speeches are all so much guff to him; his feet ache, his arms hurt, he wishes he had a drink, he is dying in his place.

Then comes the call to action, the signal that the general what-ho is to start. The chairman of the delegation, if he is a patient man, listens to the speeches and the proceedings, and gives the signal. If he is not a patient man, he appoints a stooge for this extremely arduous duty.

But when the signal comes, the delegate forgets all that is past.

Automatically he leaps to his feet, if he has been lucky enough to be sitting down. Automatically he begins waving his placarded clothes-

100,000 Democrats Will Hear Roosevelt Speech in Stadium

Washington Democrats, more than 100,000 of them, are expected to push into Griffith Stadium tonight to hear a broadcast of President Roosevelt's acceptance speech from Franklin Field, Philadelphia.

Preceding the radio speech the President's supporters will turn out for an old-fashioned torchlight parade which is scheduled to start from Constitution avenue and Tenth street at 7 p. m. and continue along past the east side of the White House and north to the Veterans Bureau; then to Rhode Island avenue to Vermont avenue to T street to Fifth street to the ball park. Marching privileges are included in the dollar admission charge to the stadium.

While Washington Democrats are carrying on under the direction of the Roosevelt Nominators Club with Joseph E. Davies as general chairman, 8,413 similar demonstrations will be held in the United States.

Total proceeds, expected to exceed $1,000,000, will be turned over to the Democratic National Committee.

Fireworks, floats, music, living cartoons and singing will enliven the proceedings in the Capital. Al Smith will be portrayed taking his famous walk. Elephants and donkeys will be put through their paces.

The President will be introduced to the Washington throng over the radio by Davies in a special telephone-radio hookup from the Quaker City. Every seat in the bleachers and grandstands of the stadium is expected to be filled by the time the Chief Executive speaks.

Before the broadcast begins a continuous program of comedy,

Text of Judge Mack's Address—Page 4.

By Franklyn Waltman.
A Staff Correspondent.

Philadelphia, June 26. — Amid scenes of frenzied and tumultuous cheering, Franklin Delano Roosevelt tonight at 11:42 o'clock (standard time), was nominated by acclamation as Democratic candidate for re-election to the Presidency.

Two minutes previously Gov. Tom Berry of South Dakota mounted the rostrum and moved for suspension of the rule requiring a roll call and the nomination of President Roosevelt by acclamation. He was answered by a piercing shriek of approval from several thousand voices.

The convention broke into an immense 15-minute demonstration, which, however, was ended when Chairman Joseph T. Robinson summarily adjourned the meeting until tomorrow morning.

Then John N. Garner will be nominated for re-election to the Vice Presidency.

An unprecedented tribute to the President came early in the day after Judge John E. Mack had placed Mr. Roosevelt's name in nomination. Then the convention went into a frenzy of adoration of and applause for the President for more than one hour, some of the participants approaching a state of hysteria.

Mr. Roosevelt's nomination, never in doubt since his election in 1932, came after a day of unprecedented oratory in which for almost seven hours this Democratic convention hall rang with fulsome praise and eulogy of President Roosevelt. Seldom has any man in the history of this country, during his lifetime, been so eulogized as was Mr. Roosevelt today.

Not only was he hailed as the savior of his country in an hour of severe economic crisis, but he was termed the "greatest man now living." He was termed a "great humanitarian," as a "young Galahad," as a man as great as the first President.

Beginning with the nominating speech proper, made early in the day by Judge Mack, who started Franklin Roosevelt on his career of public service by nominating him for the New York State Senate in 1910, a steady stream of speakers paraded across the convention rostrum proclaiming the name of President Roosevelt.

All States Represented.

A spokesman came forth from every State and every Territory and possession to second the Roosevelt nomination. Altogether 55 men and women made seconding speeches, including the Governors of 13 States, and eight United States Senators.

The climax of these seconding speeches came in the middle of the evening when a mammoth ovation was given to Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York before he scathingly denounced Republican leaders on the social security issue.

Contrary to expectations Lehman made no effort to reply to the statement sent here last Sunday and signed by five Democrats headed by Al Smith, which urged setting aside

Roosevelt Hears Wild Ovations From His Desk

Spurred by Cheers, He Tears Up Speech, Begins on New One.

By William V. Nessly.

President Roosevelt yesterday and last night sat at his desk in the White House and heard, as a climax to his three years of administration, the frenzied demands of his party's representative that he continue to lead them through the forthcoming four years and more.

At night, after a busy day, he heard his old friend, Gov. Herbert Lehman of New York, bitterly assail those who would remove him from the Presidency and listened to the wild tribute paid the Governor by the delegates at the party's convention in Philadelphia. He sent this message:

"I thank you, my old friend, from the bottom of my heart for all you said tonight.

"That wonderful tribute to you came from the hearts of every State and you rightly deserved it.

"My love to you both." (Gov. and Mrs. Lehmann).

"Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Walsh Denies Constitutional Change Is Need

Progress Possible Without Amendment, Brother of Senator Says.

Philadelphia, Pa., June 26.—Emphasizing that the District of Columbia experienced at first hand the debacle of the depression under Herbert Hoover, John Walsh, brother of Senator Thomas J. Walsh, who died just before he was slated to become Attorney General in President Roosevelt's original Cabinet, tonight seconded the nomination of Mr. Roosevelt for a second term.

Mr. Walsh said that "in my humble judgment there is no call for any amendment to the Constitution . . ." He outlined his belief that "in the fullness of time" the Supreme Court will construe the legislation for the public welfare in "any emergency."

The first portion of his speech outlined the experiences of the District of Columbia during the "reign of special privilege" in the three Republican Administrations, and then stressed that, although residents of the District are without franchise, the Democratic Party there "is as splendid and militant as any in the Union—comprising men and women who, without thought of public office or favor, unselfishly and effectively promote in various ways the best interests of our country through the instrumentality of the Democratic Party."

"No Such Policy Pursued."

"We cannot think that a party gains by not hitting its hardest or by sugaring its opinions. No such policy has been pursued at this convention and none shall be pursued in the coming campaign.

"Now that the depression has fairly run out and confidence has been returned, and the normal processes of agriculture and manufacture have been set in motion, all through the aid given by this Administration, we find arrayed against our President not only those hungry for governmental privileges and immunities, but also every shred of private grudge and every resentful special interest shorn by the official shears of executive and legislative justice. And, much to our regret, men who have been honored by our party in the past and who should be leaders of public opinion and progress are now to be found skirmishing on the march of political and economic progress to give vent to shallow criticism.

"And now the issue has been met and the people must be the judges.

Criticizes Republicans.

"There is nothing more touching than the sight of a great party in search of a leader. When no real leader came forthwith recently the Republican Party was obliged to accept a nominal leader on trust, and it chose a candidate without a record of any national public achievement or prominence. Apparently it was considered better to nominate such a man, since such a candidate was clearly representative of a party that was under the unhappiness of being still uncertain whether it had any recognizable principles. And the Republican Party adopted a platform, the single end of which is to construct a bridge over which their candidate might try to make his way to the White House.

"The only reliable information that the public possesses concerning the national, political and economic outlook of Gov. Landon may be gathered from his attitude in 1934, when he vigorously denounced before the Kansas Bankers Association the plan proposed by President Roosevelt and the Congress for the insurance of bank deposits. He adopted this stand when he knew, or ought to have known, that the banking system of Kansas was notoriously unsound. President Roosevelt at the beginning of his term promised that he would erect a banking system which would warrant the confidence of the American public. He has fulfilled that promise, and in so doing the Government has found it necessary to come to the aid of approximately 7,500 out of about 15,000 banks in the country, bu contributing to their capital to the extent of nearly $1,000,000,000.

Upholds Constitution.

"The Republicans have indulged in extensive rhetoric, charging usurpation of executive powers and the abrogation of constitutional rights. No reasonable and understanding man believes that any possibility exists under the Constitution of interference with fundamental rights of individuals or sovereign States. In my humble judgment there is no call for any amendment to the Constitution.

The judicial philosophy in the construction and interpretation of the Federal Constitution, in accordnomic advancement of the Nation, ance with the practical and ecois exemplified in the epoch-making opinions of the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, and this sound adaptable philosophy is being splendidly adopted and pursued by Justice Brandeis, whose nomination to the Supreme Court by President Woodrow Wilson was opposed by every Tory in both parties. The views of Justice Brandeis are now being fully shared by the very able Justices Cardoza and Stone, the latter once a Republican Attorney General of the United States.

"Liberal Democracies act slowly, but in the fullness of time and in the advancement of our civilization, and according to the requirements of economic, social and political necessity, the Constitution in every emergency will, I believe, be construed by the Supreme Court to uphold those things which are required for the public welfare, except where there is a positive limitation. I believe the Democratic Party and the American people will indorse such policy."

District's Court Gets New Name

When the District Supreme Court opened for business yesterday morning it had a new name.

It was the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, as provided in a bill signed by President Roosevelt, which went into effect at opening time yesterday.

Because the District Supreme Court (old name) and the United States Supreme Court are both located in Washington, the Department of Justice sponsored the bill to avoid confusion.

Politics and People

Democratic Platform Superior to Republican in Leaving Candidate's Hands Free.

By Franklyn Waltman

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., June 26. The Democratic platform is a clever, adroit job. Indeed, the more one reads that document the more impressed one becomes with the skill of the drafters. It is skillful because it says virtually nothing, leaving to President Roosevelt the shaping of the issues as he sees fit.

WALTMAN.

And in the opinion of this observer that is as it should be. The nominee should and usually does make his own platform. These documents adopted by national conventions mean little—as Mr. Roosevelt has demonstrated during the last three years. Consequently it is wise and honest to leave the candidate free to take his stand. But before election day he should make his stand clear.

Gov. Alf M. Landon has indicated that he will do this, but, unlike President Roosevelt, he will be subjected to embarrassment by a party platform which undertakes to commit the Republicans to certain definite things. The Republicans made a blundering job of their platform and Gov. Landon fully realizes that it is up to him to save that situation, irrespective of embarrassment.

The Democratic platform indorses all the objectives of the New Deal and most that has been done in the name of the New Deal—without being too specific about it. The intelligent opponents of the New Deal agree with its objectives. Their objections are to the methods pursued in seeking to reach those objectives. The platform is vague as to methods and procedure.

Thus it is possible to draw from the document exactly what you wish. If you are rampant New Dealers, you can find in this platform an outline of governmental philosophy sufficiently advanced to satisfy you. If you are a conservative, you can point out that the platform in no place specifically proposes any step that is radical.

As an illustration, let us examine the plank dealing with the Constitution—regarded as the most important plank in the platform and a surprise to many here, although, to blow our own horn, we predicted exactly that kind of plank on the question in this place Thursday morning.

A prominent New Dealer this morning hailed this plank with pleasure, asserting that it was a strong, unequivocal declaration that the Democratic Party stands ready to face the issue of bringing not only social problems but all commercial transactions with a national interest under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Several minutes later a prominent advocate of States' rights in this convention explained that he thought the plank was splendid, in that it fully recognized the importance of local self-government and stood as a barrier against the President subsequently proposing a constitutional amendment which would make possible a repetition of legislation as broadly drafted as was NRA.

Now each of these men read into the plank their own desires. Although contradicting each other, either may be right. It depends solely on how President Roosevelt wishes to interpret that plank. The latitude granted to him for interpretation is unrestrained. Mr. Roosevelt is not under any obligation to do anything regarding a constitutional amendment. He may find in time it is not necessary. But once he decides a constitutional amendment is necessary he is the sole judge of the kind of an amendment, for the platform proposes, if necessary, such a "clarifying amendment as will assure to the legislatures of the several States and to the Congress of the United States, each within its proper jurisdiction, the power to enact those laws which the State and Federal legislatures, within their respective spheres, shall find necessary, in order adequately to regulate commerce, protect public health and safety and safeguard economic security."

All of which comprises a perfect hedge of whatever is promised. There is nothing definite about that. It settles nothing, the entire constitutional argument revolves around the question of what is the "proper jurisdiction" or the "respective spheres" of the Federal and State governments in regulating commerce and safeguarding economic security.

The argument was made here today the Democratic Party has gone on record as affirming that they do not propose further to flout the Constitution—that if they cannot do what they wish under the Constitution they will seek its amendment, thus giving the people a chance to pass on what they propose to do.

The plank is susceptible of that construction and, if that is the correct interpretation, it represents an honest and courageous course with which none may validly quarrel. It is much more straightforward than to tell Congress to forget about the Constitution, as was done in the Guffey coal legislation.

Still another thing said about this platform which cannot be disputed until President Roosevelt makes clear what his course will be is that the party has refused to indorse the economy of scarcity, the collectivism and the reckless monetary experimentation which has marked the New Deal.

Thus it was argued that the platform leaves Mr. Roosevelt free to turn to the right whenever he wishes—and that is a distinct gain for the Democratic rightists. There is no doubt that the left-wing groups would have preferred a platform more specific in proclaiming the things for which they stand. Some of them, it appears, have become distrustful of Mr. Roosevelt. They are afraid that if re-elected, he may become more conservative.

At all events it is a grand platform. It should be be labeled: "As you like it."

Majority Rule Fight Not Over, Virginian Says

Southern Delegates Look to 1940; Reapportionment Plan Is Awaited.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, June 26.—Southern opponents of two-thirds rule repeal said today that their fight to retain this century-old requirement for a Presidential candidate to obtain two-thirds of the convention votes was "not over by any means."

They asserted abrogation of this requirement at last night's session of the National Convention applied only to the current gathering, and if the national committee failed to work out a satisfactory delegate reapportionment plan in the interim it might be revived in 1940.

The committee was instructed by the convention to formulate a new plan of apportionment based on "Democratic strength" in the various States rather than on total population as at present. The next convention would pass on its recommendations.

May Force Readoption.

State Senator Aubrey G. Weaver, of Front Royal, Va., a foe of the newly substituted majority rule, said today that arrangement held all sorts of possibilities for 1940.

For one thing, he said, it would be not unlikely for a group of favorite-son candidates to "going up" against a strong candidate, control the rules committee, and force adoption of the two-thirds rule.

"Each State has only one vote in the committee," he added, "and it would be easy for all the favorite sons to control it."

He asserted the "fight is not over by any means," and other Dixie representatives agreed.

"If the national committee doesn't work out a satisfactory apportionment plan, in accordance with convention instructions, then yesterday's action won't mean much," he added.

Sees Minority Selection.

Weaver said the "main thing about abolition of the rule at this time is that it breaks a precedent only for this convention. The resolutions for a new apportionment gives us good ammunition to start with if the adjustment is not done properly."

Weaver said by leaving in force the unit rule, under which some States are required to cast their entire delegate vote as a majority dictates, the repeal of the two-thirds rule would make possible the selection of a Presidential standard bearer by a majority of the convention representatives.

He explained the rules committee directed the national committee to base the new apportionment on Democratic "strength" rather than on Democratic votes in the previous national election because some Southern States, like Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Alabama, cast their heaviest vote in primaries.

Nominators Deny Truck Protests

While Police Headquarters received a good many calls yesterday asking, "Home Come?" concerning the free and easy ways of a raucous sound truck advertising the Roosevelt rally in Griffith Stadium, not one person complained to the group responsible for sending the noise wagon into the streets.

"We haven't had a single complaint," said a spokesman late yesterday for the Roosevelt Nominators, a temporary organization which planned the rally and then sent the truck out to whip up enthusiasm for it.

The Roosevelt Nominators seemed surprised that anyone would object to a little noise in behalf of their rally.

"All Washington," said the spokesman, "has seemed so thrilled over our plans and what we are doing that we nd it hard to believe anyone has complained of the truck."

Late yesterday, however, it was still "following the crowds," broadcasting an invitation to come to Griffith Stadium tonight to hear a broadcast of President Roosevelt's acceptance speech from Philadelphia.

One-Eyed Connelly Loses Job as Guard

Philadelphia, June 26 (AP).—There was an ugly rumor going the rounds of the Democratic national convention today concerning the ability of America's professional gate-crasher, One-Eyed Connelly, to keep people from crashing gates.

Several days ago Connelly ingratiated himself with Chairman James A. Farley to the extent that he did not have to crash the gate. They gave him a job watching it.

Suddenly Connelly vanished from the gate.

"Where's Connelly? asked newsmen of a uniformed guard.

"Oh, he's upstairs in a soft seat. He got canned down here."

"What was the matter?"

"Too many people crashed the gate on him."

Theft of $90 Reported.

Charles M. Gillard, of Nashville, Tenn., told police yesterday he had a gold watch and chain and $90 stolen from his room in a downtown hotel.

Daughter Joins Demonstration For Roosevelt

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, June 26.—That Democratic organizer, Anna Roosevelt Boettiger, the President's daughter, led occupants of the Roosevelt box into action today, literal and figurative high spot of this clamorous convention scene.

Yellow-haired, blue-eyed Anna, in a flame-colored blouse, stood high above parade and pandemonium, waving, autographing, chatting with two sisters-in-law, Betsy Roosevelt, wife of James, and Betty Roosevelt, former wife of Elliott.

When Franklin, jr., joined the crowd she put her nomination-moment enthusiasm into a sisterly hug and kiss.

It was Anna who started a family game—pass along the microphone. Not a bit bashful, she told a listening-in public about how a stranger on the train asked her advice about coming to this convention, a bit fearful that it would be "a riot," and Anna admitting it might be noisy, told her it would also be interesting.

Franklin, jr., debonairely said a few words, then plunked the mike into the lap of his bashful brother John, who said he'd let his brother do the talking, and pushed the mike right back.

"Oh, here's another brother," said Franklin, jr., putting Anna's husband, John Boettiger, on the spot.

"Wise man," wisecracked Franklin, jr.

"That's enough, I think everybody must be getting very tired of this," smilingly cut in Anna, "and we're having lots of fun just watching this show."

"I love it!" said Betty Donner Roosevelt, watching the noisy arena with shining eyes.

Asked how the big show compared with Chicago four years ago, however, John Boettiger, a newspaper man in those days, said: "It couldn't possibly be as good as Chicago."

In the next box, curly-haired Nan Cook, close friend of Mrs. Roosevelt, stood on her chair, clapped and cherred, then took time off to send a couple of telegrams—one to Hyde Park to order the Roosevelt Sunday supper, one to Eleanor Roosevelt in the White House.

New Deal to Win With Roosevelt, Dovell Predicts

Seconding Speech Lauds President; Two Thirds Rule Return Hinted.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, June 26.—Ashton Dovell, Speaker of the House of Delegates, said tonight "Virginia, the mother of States and statesmen" and "Cradle of American Civilization" is "going forward with Roosevelt to victory."

Dovell, in a prepared speech seconding the renominating of President Roosevelt by the Democratic convention, said "The alternative is to go back to the old order that bogged down and lost its ways even with a great engineer as pilot."

"We shudder at the thought of what might happen," he said, "under a bull moose whose instinct is to destroy."

State Senator Aubrey G. Weaver, Front Royal, today was in the thick of repercussions from the abandonment of the two-thirds rule by the convention, with the assertion that the fight "is not over by any means."

Might "Gang Up."

Predicting that "anything might happen in 1940," Weaver said it might be possible that a group of States with "favorite son candidates" might "gang up" and force re-adoption of the century old rule.

Weaver said also that the unit rule, left standing, under which some States cast their entire delegate vote as a majority dictates, makes possible the selections of a Presidential standard bearer by a minority of the convention representatives, in the absence of the abandoned two-thirds rule.

"The main thing about abolition of the rule now is that the precedent is broken for only this convention," he said. "The resolutions for a new apportionment gives us good ammunition if the adjustment by the national committee is not a proper one."

The Virginia standard was jerked from its holder and thrust into the hands of Gov. George C. Peery, in today's demonstration following the placing of the President's name in nomination. With State Chairman J. Murray Hooker, he shoved off into the parade with scores of the Virginians filing behind.

Family in Parade.

The family of State Senator A. E. Shumate, of Giles, had 100 per cent representation in the parade. He was accompanied by his wife, Miss Phlegar, A. E., jr., Rufus H., and Celia Ann.

Joel Flood, former Representative from Appomattox, and the son of Hal Flood, shouted "the Virginia delegation needs some life" and hoisted a banner reading "To Hell With Al, We Want Frank—Virginia."

A similar sign was found in the hall last night by Dovell, who tore it up with the comment he "liked the sentiment but not the language."

Mrs. Joseph Whitehead, State vice chairman, of Amherst, made a radio broadcast, in which she said she was "greatly impressed by the caliber of the women representation in the convention—and in that Virginia yields to none."

Labor Leaders Fail to Agree On New Party

By the Associated Press.

Tamiment, Pa., June 26.—Labor leaders today debated vigorously the formation of a labor party to offer its own candidates this fall in all but the Presidential election—and failed to agree.

A strong faction, headed by James J. Bambrick, of the New York Building Service Employes Union, argued against the move, which had been sponsored by Louis Waldman, New York Right Wing Socialist leader, and a numerical majority of the speakers favored waiting until after the fall elections before entering the lists.

The group agreed to support the candidacy of President Roosevelt against the Republican, Union, Socialist and Communist nominees on the premise that the "New Deal" had been of greater benefit to labor than any previous regime and gave promise of continued consideration of labor's desires.

Waldman said he hoped to see labor candidates in city, State and Congressional races in November, but the conference—a part of the second annual Tamiment Economic and Social Institute—sought a middle course.

"This meeting should not be considered as a political convention, but as a discussion group from which crystallized labor party sentiment might develop," he said.

Bambrick argued that labor should demand 40 per cent representation in the Democratic and Republican parties "because the labor votes comprise 40 per cent of the American vote."

fireworks and music will be presented under the direction of Arthur Godfrey, radio commentator. The colored choir, which has been singing at the Philadelphia convention under the direction of Elder Michaud, will come by special train in time for the parade and program at the stadium.

Among the paraders will be Thomas O. Lyddane, 87, of 50 Nicholas street, selected as the oldest Democrat in the District. Before the celebration is over he will be presented with a bottle of 1873 wine.

Most of the marchers will be divided into State divisions, headed by Rooseveltians selected by Democratic Senators and Representatives. For marching purposes the State divisions have been subdivided into Congressional districts and counties. Several thousand Democrats from Arlington County, Va., will form their own division.

Another unit will consist of costumed young people on bicycles or roller skates, competing for prizes.

There will be at least 16,000 marchers from District organizations, a contingent of CCC boys, and another of Job's Daughters, Masonic society for girls.

Commissioner Melvin Hazen, grand marshal, will have Dickie Moore, child screen star, as assistant grand marshal. They will be accompanied by a mounted staff of 40 and a police escort.

At intervals among the marchers the following bands will play: Washington Gas Light Employes, Arlington County, Police Boys, Elks Boys, National Training School and Firemen's Band.

The parade will halt in front of the Veterans' Bureau for short speeches, fireworks, cheering and flag waving. The organization of the marchers and the route they will take has been planned by Col. H. S. Kimberly, Col. John W. Oehmann and Col. C. O. Estes.

tion of the merit system, is bound to feel affronted by the platform's casual reference to this important issue.

Nor will they get much comfort out of the reminder that the Democratic Party "first established and fostered" a system for which it has of late evinced nothing but contempt.

Another plank which must strike a sour note with mothers throughout the land is the one concerned with youth, which reads in part:

"Our youth has been returned to the road to freedom and prosperity."

When one of our major political parties makes such a statement to the millions of unemployed and well-nigh desperate boys and girls, our young people are justified in thinking that the older generation is completely lacking in understanding of the cruel hardships with which they are contending.

Were Regaled by Jim.

I fear that most of them at that precise moment were at a delightful breakfast at which they and their good friend, Jim Farley, were celebrating the great victory of woman's admission to the party councils.

While Jim was feeding them his usual smooth flattery about what great girls they were and how they must work harder and harder for the party, the men behind the locked doors of the resolutions committee were sabotaging everything for which the women of America have been fighting in their own futile way.

It is the height of irony and perfect proof of Farley's sinister skill, that the Democratic women should feel triumphant just when they have been dealt their most overwhelming defeat.

The very fact that these Democratic women are no fools, probably makes the trick he has played upon them just that much more fun for him.

He is a political artist, their Jim, the only real professional amongst a lot of amateurs.

When the time comes to build him a monument, it should bear the simple, but eloquent inscription, "He knew what he wanted."

G. O. P. Is Blamed In Merit Bills Death

By the Associated Press.

Chairman Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, of the Civil Service Committee, blamed House Republicans yesterday for the death of two measures which he said would have carried out the merit system plank of the Democratic platform.

One of the bills, seeking to place first, second and third class postmasters on civil service, was passed over twice when Republicans objected to it, he said, then failed to get the necessary two-thirds after Minority Leader Snell demanded a roll-call vote.

The other, proposing to extend the classified civil service to all positions not already included, was killed, Ramspeck said, when a Republican objected to its passage on the consent calendar.

"It is regrettable," he said, "that the Republicans could not forget partisanship long enough to help make this contribution to better government."

Former Coughlin Aid Seeks Seat in Senate

Detroit, June 26 (AP).—Louis B. Ward, advertising man who formerly represented Father Charles E. Coughlin in Washington, announced today his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for United State Senator from Michigan.

Ward said he no longer was connected with Father Coughlin, but that they remained on friendly terms and that he would welcome the support of the priest's organization if it were offered.

Senator Ellison D. Smith, of South Carolina, took another walk yesterday, declaring he would positively stay away from remaining sessions of the Democratic National Convention.

When Senator Hattie Caraway, of Arkansas, prepared to make speech seconding nomination of President Roosevelt, she discovered her spectacles had been misplaced. Those she is wearing were borrowed from Gov. Bibb Graves of Alabama.

pole and stomping his feet. His face opens with a yell of high-pitched glee, he jumps into the air, he surges forward, he perspiringly shoves and jams his way around and around the hall, he forgets his woes in the exigency of his automatic love for the President, he feels wonderful.

And there are few more pleasurable sights than this very spectacle, no matter how loud and how often and how similar it is to the last one.

The demonstrations tonight have been so utterly mechanical, so forced and so routine in character that no amount of stimulus from the bands, the organs, the fife and drum corps, has been able to whip the convention into any semblance of a genuine hoopla spectacle. The Democrats are not yelled out, they still have new noise-makers to trot out, they are still ready to march—they merely have nothing for which to march. They have applauded some thousands of mentions of President Roosevelt's name. They have yelled separately, State by State, for each of their chiefs on the stand seconding the nomination of the President. They have done everything. They have loosed great coveys of balloons, like clusters of giant multicolored grapes, they have whined sirens, have ridden donkeys. And they are still fresh after five days' of yelling.

Tonight they lined up the center aisle for almost two hours waiting for the mention of the name of Gov. Herbert Lehman of New York. The long aisle, packed close with the bearers of banners labeled "Lehman Must Run," "Draft Lehman," "Win With Lehman," "Roosevelt and Lehman," etc., etc., was in planned tribute to the man whose decision to run for Governor again this year will carry such significance in the vote count next November.

Waits for "Air" Time.

They waited and perspired, the banner bearers, while the roll of the States droned on. Chairman Robinson passed New York until 10 p. m., daylight time, in order to get the welcome for the Governor and his answering speech on the air at the best radio time.

Mechanically, when Lehman's name was mentioned at 10:02 p. m., the delegations began their demonstration. It went on for 12 minutes. Then the Governor began to speak. It was doubtful that one person on the floor followed his address. The delegates were all out of their seats, walking around, talking, shaking hands, telling stories, buying soda pop and hot dogs and comparing bunions. Again and again Chairman Robinson gaveled for order. They paid no attention. Lehman mopped his brow, talked on and on, stopped, sat down.

After that, the galleries began to empty. The seconding speeches went on drearily. After the Utah speech, Robinson, tired and unhappy, asked future speakers to condense their remarks. This was at midnight.

The one genuinely cheered speech of the evening was that by Gov. Gen. Frank Murphy of the Philippine Islands, who stepped to the microphone and said merely, "I have the honor on behalf of the Philippine Islands to second the nomination of President Roosevelt," stepped back and sat down. This convention roared mighty approval after the dreary evening which had bogged the hall in a swamp of meaningless words.

And now that President Roosevelt has been nominated by acclamation, and the convention has recessed until Saturday at 10 a. m., the hall is clear once more, blank and still, with only the chug of buses outside and the shuffle of departing feet.

The last sound comes from a policeman at the microphone where the mighty of the party have shouted all evening. He says:

"Gov. Earle's chauffeur is wanted outside." Then he turns to his fellow cop and groans, "Boy, Sunday is my day off, and I'm gonna lay aboard the biggest cargo of 4-year-old I can buy."

The Democrats broke all records this afternoon for noise, yelling so terrifically that they broke the tall applause gauge on which a light flickers up and down registering noise like a thermometer.

For one hour and two minutes the delegates, alternates, gallery crowds and party big wigs joined in a demonstration to end all demonstrations. President Roosevelt finally had been placed in nomination. The applause indicator shot to its peak of 100 and stayed there for more than 35 minutes. The incredibly high pitch and volume of noise like this proved to the satisfaction of one and all that any Democrat can outshout thrice his weight in Republicans, for at Cleveland the gauge rarely touched 90 and then but for a few seconds.

The scene on the floor, touched off when tall, dry-speaking John E. Mack, lifelong friend of the President, dramatically rolled out the syllables: "Frank-lin Del-a-no Roose-velt," was the kind that sends people to the booby-hatch.

Almost half of the thousand delegates and alternates scrambled into the aisles or shoved and milled and surged around and around, splitting the eardrums of everybody within range as the walls bulged with sound.

In a moment the delegates were jammed inextricably. This jam lasted the full hour and in all that time the sweating, near-hysterical mob shuffled forward only inches at a time as they shouted.

Nearly every other Democrat in the conglomerate mass carried a sign, placard, banner, pennant of some kind. Everyone, without distinction, carried a noisemaker of some kind, rattles, whistles, bells, horns, clackers.

The dignitaries marched with the loveliest alternates in their eagerness to hail the party's chief. Gov. Lehman of New York carried a huge placard mounted on a beanpole. Senator Kenneth McKellar, of Tennessee, was so carried away that he seized the beauteous 18-year-old Tennessee delegate, Miss Sarah Hale, hoisted her to his shoulder and bore her about the hall.

Hoisted to Shoulders.

The convention's dream girl, Miss Marian Fore, of Floresville, Tex., who besides being Miss Texas Centennial is now Miss Democratic Convention of 1936, was lifted to Texan shoulders and carried about the hall also, as were the President's sons, James, John and Franklin D., jr., and Elliott.

Miss Fore, who is very beautiful, indeed, with wide-set eyes of dark blue and rich chestnut hair, wore her convention costume.

This is a white buckskin bolero over a white silk blouse, white buckskin skirt, white high-heeled boots and a great white 10-gallon hat. The competition for the honor of carrying Miss Fore about the hall was so keen that the Texas delegation nearly broke up in a brawl.

On and on, around and around, the swarm shoved, packing together to the suffocation point, and then clearing in sudden eddies as some wild man would begin waving a flag or uttering rebel whoops. A young woman in a white guimpe became hysterical in the melee and in abandoned fashion began high-kicking and shrieking unintelligibly like a new convert at an old-fashioned revival, shuddering all over, jerking like a burlesque dancer, and screeching in an ear-piercing voice.

One sign said "LaNdOnkNOx," thus spelling out "No, No." An old-ish fat man in a palm beach suit rode about on a very bored-looking donkey. On the stand Senator Robinson gave up gavelling, found a chair, and actually tried to take a nap. Anna Roosevelt Boettiger, the President's daughter, shaking her head and laughing, stood on a press-stand table. She wore a small brown felt hat, a rust-red gold-buttoned blouse, and a brown light-weight tweed walking skirt.

Landon Work Assailed.

A huge Kansas sign said:

"How Landon has balanced the budget: Federal contribution, 70.28; county contribution, 29.43; Landon contribution, .29." A Colorado banner said "Cool Colorado is hot for Roosevelt."

A Maryland sign said: "The Free State of Maryland is 100 per cent for Roosevelt and Garner." Over a large picture of the President, one sign said: "The party with a soul."

Finally Robinson again began pounding with his gavel. No one paid any attention. Then, hoping for order, he had Gov. Bibb Graves of Alabama, maker of the first seconding speech, come on. Graves, a small, but stentorian-voiced Southerner, bellowed ceaselessly into the microphone for more than 15 minues, and not one person in the hall heard a single word he said. It was like King Canute shouting at the waves to stop breaking on the shore.

An hour and ten minutes after the demonstration started the hall quieted down sufficiently for the seconding speeches to continue.

As soon as these got well under way nearly everybody in the hall left, the galleries clearing out rapidly. Long before New Jersey's, last seconding speech of the afternoon session, was reached, the convention hall crowd was dwindling.

In the aftermath of the parade debacle last night, a fight has developed between Mayor S. Davis Wilson of Philadelphia and the Farrell Construction Co., which built the stands after their earlier higher bids were rejected as too costly. About 125 persons were injured when the three stands went down last night during the mammoth parade of the Mummers, as people fighting for vantage points crammed the stands to what police termed a "100 per cent overload."

The company and the mayor have issued statements at intervals all day and nearly all of the authorities are giving lusty bronx cheers at the police, who actually have been doing a very sound job, remaining courteous, helpful, polite and somehow sane in the midst of one of the most arduous weeks any police force ever had to maintain order.

The President Gets 'a Break'—Misses 60 Seconding Speeches

Roosevelt Sits in Cool of White House as Hoarse and Thirsty Orators Take Turns to Make Him Most-Nominated Candidate in History.

By the United Press.

Convention Hall, Philadelphia, June 26.—President Roosevelt is the most thoroughly nominated candidate in the history of the Democratic Party.

He's lucky, too. He can stay in his nice, air-conditioned White House. He doesn't have to listen to a single word of the thousands and the tens of thousands spoken in his praise. He doesn't have to squirm and sweat and smoke cigarettes while 60—count 'em—orators second his nomination.

He's sitting back there in the Capital sipping iced tea. Maybe he's even got his house slippers on.

Here in Convention Hall there's nothing to drink but fake orangeade at 15 cents a throw and the delegates can't even get out to that because of the crush of 20,000 Democrats. The delegates can't take off their shoes, either. They've got to sit tight on too-small chairs and suffer.

There is at least one speech maker from every State and Territory. Their oratory runs from good to indifferent to bad. There are Governors, Cabinet members and women Democrats, all ending their addresses with the words:

"Franklin Delano Roosevelt."

There are voices which sound like thunder, canary birds, sawmills, mice and grizzly bears. There are voices squeaky, gruff, raspy, high-pitched, falsetto, mumbly and mushy.

The seconders of the nomination each have three minutes in which to shoot the works for Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Senator William Gibbs McAdoo, of California, cheats. He takes up the Sunshine State's full three minutes and then rings in a couple of brunettes—one the youngest delegate to the convention—who also second the motion.

The Attorney General of these United States does the honors for Connecticut. Homer Cummings, the chief of the Federal agents, looks a lot like the President—except that at the moment he's sweaty, tired and hoarse.

Heavy-jowled John Biggs, jr., says Delaware wants Roosevelt. Bushy-headed John G. Robinson announces he's from Florida, the State of flowers and orange blossoms. He dittoes Biggs.

The seconders from all the other States, Alaska, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, the Philippines, Puerto Rico and the Canal Zone do the same.

President Roosevelt doesn't know what he's missing (or maybe he does).

It must be nice to be President—and far away.

chum, Judge John E. Mack, of New York State, present his name again for selection as Democracy's general in the political wars just ahead, and, thinking in terms of the courtroom, rather than those of the battlefield, he phoned the judge:

"Congratulations. I hope they find for your client."

The hope was unnecessary. The jury of delegates long ago had found for the judge's client. There was no opposition counsel, no counter-plea to the jurors, the jurors themselves, scores of them, vociferously joining in the judge's demand to find for his "client."

Spurred by the wildness of his followers' cheers at Philadelphia, the Executive worked painstakingly on his reply to their cries for his continued leadership. Going over the speech he had prepared, with which to accept the Presidential renomination tonight, he found it inadequate, tore it up and plunged into the task of preparing a new one—one that he felt would more nearly harmonize with the scene at Philadelphia and the situation throughout the country.

Denying himself to callers, he strove to complete the address and at the same time dispose of more of the pile of bills that Congress dumped upon his desk in its closing days of last week.

The President conducted a cheerful press conference before the main events and tasks of the eventful day. Regarding summer vacation plans, he said he probably would be in Washington most of the time and that no long vacation trips were being planned.

Signs 55 Bills.

He said three shifts were being operated in the effort to dispose of the congressional bills promptly, with more than 100 measures awaiting his signature. By nightfall he had signed 55 of the bills and vetoed half a dozen. Most of those acted upon authorized coins or medals for anniversary occasions.

A limit of 3.2 per cent by weight, or 4 per cent by volume on the amount of alcohol in beverages sold in States receiving Federal protection as dry States under the twenty-first amendment became law when the President signed a bil fixing that maximum.

Attorneys for the Treasury Department said the effect of the measure was only to allow enforcement of the twenty-first amendment. Heretofore, they said, there had been no statute to provide the dry States the protection specified by the constitutional amendment.

Seamen's Measure Signed.

One bill which was signed, designed to assure efficient crews on sions requiring certificates of service, the maintenance of continuous discharge books, new examinations and 8-hour watches for seamen.

Another bill provided for United States participation in the North Atlantic International Ice Patrol Service. Participation now is by executive order. Ever since the Titanic diaster this country has cooperated with other nations using the ice-infested waters in maintaining a Coast Guard patrol.

The Executive approved a bill to give the Secretary of Agriculture "final and conclusive" power to determine the correct base acreage and production figures for the adjustment of old AAA contracts.

A Senate report on the measure said enactment would "release for payment from 40,000 to 50,000 cases which, under the interpretation of the General Accounting Office, could not be certified for payment.

Bonus Bill Vetoed.

Among the measures vetoed was one to permit certain provisional officers to share in the soldier bonus. Mr. Roosevelt observed that he had vetoed every bonus measure brought to him, and to approve the last one would have been inconsistent.

Today further bills are to be considered, before the President leaves where, starting at about 9 o'clock, late in the evening for Philadelphia Washington time, he will deliver his address accepting the Democratic nomination for the Presidency.

Platform Clarification

tion in the platform, said he was "perfectly satisfied with it."

Guffey said both the labor and constitutional planks "are broad enough to cover the coal problem."

Among convention leaders who thought the platform draftsmen made a mistake in declaring for a constitutional amendment if needed, was Senator Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri, chairman of the rules committee.

"Leaves Door Open."

"Of course, it is not a flat declaration, but it leaves the door open farther than I would like," said Senator Clark. "Otherwise, it is an excellent presentation of the case."

Some of the conservatives conceded privately that the platform was "a bit blatant" in extolling the virues of the New Deal.

"But then," one laughed, "we have never been charged with modesty."

The studious attempt to follow Jeffersonian phraseology, even to the extent of reiterating the "we hold this truth to be self-evident" line from the Declaration of Independence, also was subject to wide comment.

Senator O'Mahoney, of Wyoming, carried away with the occasion, was moved to the following historic statement:

"This is the most progressive, liberal document in defense of human rights since the Declaration of Independence."

Had President's Approval.

Similarity of style in all of the planks led to speculation on whether one person had written the entire platform, regardless of how many had their fingers in it. Certainly it all had the President's approval in advance.

One member of the resolutions committee who would not be quoted, remarked:

"You don't think we wrote this platform, do you?"

The answer was "no."

"Well," he laughed, "I don't either."

Senator Bailey, of South Carolina: "It is all right."

Chairman Jesse Jones, of the RFC: "An excellent pltaform and Illustrates clearly the course which the Administration will take during the next four years."

Representative Compton White, Idaho silverite—"A transcendent statement of party principles. Although silver was not mentioned, we have the assurance of leaders that the Administration is in favor of it."

Assistant Secretary of Labor McGrady—"Eminently satisfactory to leaders of labor."

Representative Paul Kvale, Minnesota Farmer-Laborite—"A marvelous display of enthusiasm; some of it perhaps synthetic, but nevertheless impressive. It serves to justify my conviction that a third party is not only ill-timed and unnecessary, but a maladjusted mesalliance."

Senator Walsh, of Massachusetts—"Some may not subscribe to every word of every line, but I think it is a good platform."

House Whip Pat Boland—"It will continue us on the road to normalcy. The labor and social features are paramount."

Senator McKellar, of Tennessee—"Any great question like maximum hours and minimum wages cannot under our institutions be controlled either by State or local authority. It is necessary that we have some clarifying amendment."

Connelly Approves.

Senator Connally, of Texas—"On the whole the platform is one of the best adopted in years, but I haven't yet read it carefully. I like the proposal to take the profits out of war."

Senator McAdoo, of California—"Very swell. Just right, so far as I am concerned."

Senator George, of Georgia—"It is a conservatively progressive and a perfectly clear platform."

J. Stitt Wilson, of California, a member of platform-drafting subcommittee—"The Democratic Party under this platform has made itself the home and the instrument of every progressive, liberal and constructive mind in America."

Representative Dickstein, of New York—"I like it, except that it failed to deal adequately with the immigration issue."

Charles West, Interior Undersecretary and White House "contact" man—"A liberal, forward-looking recital of the record, showing we can and will go forward to obtain the objectives of the Administration."

'Red' Workers Urged to Curb 'Fascist Wars'

Convention at N. Y. Hears Robert Minor in Plea for World Sanctions.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 26.—Robert Minor, Communist candidate for Governor of New York, today told a cheering, chanting convention of Communists that "workers' world economic sanctions against Fascist aggressors can stop war."

Minor, reporting to the party's ninth national convention on "the fight for peace," demanded:

1. The overthrow of Hitler.
2. Expulsion of Japan from China.
3. Expulsion of Italy from Ethiopia.
4. A united front of workers.

"Red front," "Red front," the 725 delegates cheered back at him as he promised:

"We will unite the masses of this country for sanctions against the Fascist war makers."

Hailing Soviet Russia as the organizer of world peace, Minor sharply criticized the foreign policy planks of both major parties.

The Democrat "good neighbor" policy, he said, "was disguised 'Yankee imperialism'" and the Republican foreign policy "a blank sheet of paper and a fountain pen in the hand of William Randolph Hearst."

For the United States, he advocated mass cultivation of the Army and Navy to eliminate "Fascist" elements and the formation "of a vast popular movement" with workers of other nations as practical steps to end war.

A rousing 10-minute ovation greeted James W. Ford, colored leader, after he shouted that virtual serfdom, lynching and "jim crow" laws were forcing increasing large numbers of his race into the Communist Party.

Showers of newspaper fragments rained down on the demonstrators as they heaved Ford to their shoulders and paraded around the hall. "We want Ford," the 725 delegates chanted as they marched.

Ford, Communist candidate for Vice President in 1932, is virtually assured of the nomination at proceedings next Sunday. The demonstration was the second longest of the convention, being exceeded only by that given Earl Browder, a leading candidate for the Presidential nomination.

Gov. Lehmann Charges G.O.P. Fights Security

Says Foes Would Discredit Movement for Social Betterment.

Philadelphia, June 26.—Subjected to an unprecedented demonstration by the Democratic Convention—staged by national party leaders—appealing to him to seek re-election as Governor of New York, Herbert H. Lehman tonight, in seconding the nomination of President Roosevelt, scathingly denounced Republican leaders for opposing social security measures.

His attack was directed chiefly at Republican leaders in New York, but he also assailed as "hypocrisy" the social security plank of the Republican National Convention, and declared that the attitude of the New York leaders was significant because of their influence in the national party.

He accused the national Republican leadership of seeking to "discredit, tear down and block" the movement for social betterment inaugurated by President Roosevelt. He charged that the New York Republican leaders who now "give lip service to protecting women and children in industry" had "bitterly opposed" the New York minimum wage law for women and children recently invalidated by the Supreme Court.

Hails Roosevelt.

Lehman expressed a solemn hope that the Supreme Court this fall would grant a rehearing of the minimum wage law and would reverse its five-to-four decision of several weeks ago. But in the event that hope is not realized, he said the only course was to proceed through an orderly amendment of the Constitution to empower the State governments to deal with such matters.

He also defended his "old chief and friend," as he described the President, against charges that the latter weakened American institutions and principles. He hailed Mr. Roosevelt for restoring prosperity to the country.

Gov. Lehman's appearance before the convention was a two-edged sword. On the one hand, national party leaders did the unprecedented thing of staging a mammoth demonstration in tribute to Lehman in an effort to get him to change his mind and seek re-election as Governor. On the other, Lehman laid down a strong attack on the Republicans of his State and the Nation. The purpose of both moves obviously was designed to make New York safe for President Roosevelt this year.

Preparation Takes Hours.

Hours of preparation were devoted to the demonstration for Gov. Lehman. When the convention met in its evening session virtually all State delegations had tacked to their standards placards reading: "New York: Draft Lehman." Larger placards screamed in large type: "New York: We Want Lehman."

Bands waited in corridors off the convention floor and some delegations brought clusters of toy gas balloons into the hall, to be let loose when the demonstration started. Word was passed out to all delegations to do all they could to impress upon the New York Governor the desire of the party nationally to have him run again.

The delegations did not disappoint National Committee Chairman James A. Farley. For a few minutes their tribute to the Empire State Governor reached a volume and peak as great as that given to President Roosevelt earlier in the day when his name was first put in nomination.

Twice Chairman Robinson interrupted the New York Governor to plead with the delegates and galleries to cease conversation and give their silent attention to the speaker. But his pleas were without avail, even though Lehman was making a spirited attack on the Republicans.

When New York was reached on the roll call of States for seconding speeches it was temporarily passed over because the convention managers wished to give Gov. Lehman more suitable radio time. The auspicious hour decided upon was 10 o'clock Eastern daylight saving time. Two minutes after that hour the reading clerk cried out: "New York." Chairman Robinson announced:

"New York has experienced many able Governors, but none has enjoyed the confidence of the people as has the man I am now going to present to you. I introduce Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York."

The din was on. Suddenly all over the hall appeared hundreds of huge placards bearing in large letters such inscriptions as: "Lehman by one million." "Lehman must run." "Lehman again." "We want Lehman."

Praises Roosevelt.

Gov. Lehman began his speech by expressing admiration for President Roosevelt's services when the latter was Governor of New York, and recited the fear, distrust and hopelessness which he said pervaded the country when Mr. Roosevent entered the White House.

He contended that the day President Roosevelt was inaugurated, "it seemed almost as if a miracle had come to our sorely stricken people." He referred briefly to the measures taken by the President to stem the tide of depression and then described the returning business recovery.

Getting down to the meat of his attack on the Republicans, Gov. Lehman asserted Mr. Roosevelt "has never wavered in his conviction that our Democratic form of Government is a vehicle created by the people for the purpose of securing for all citizens equal opportunity and equal security so far as human intelligence can achieve them."

Assails G. O. P. Leadership.

"Public spirited Republicans are unquestionably just as deeply concerned with and sincerely devoted to the principles of social justice and social security as are those of the Democratic Party," asserted Gov. Lehman. "They will continue to support, as they have done militantly in the past, sound measures proposed for the benefit of the underprivileged.

"But there is not the least doubt in my mind that there is a determined effort on the part of Republican political leadership to discredit, tear down and block the great movement for social betterment of which our President has been the spearhead and the inspiration.

"I am convinced, too, that the attack on the entire program for social betterment extends not only to the Federal government but to the States themselves. I have, in my own State, seen the most cruel, the most arrogant attempt on the part of Republican leadership to sabotage Federal and State social and labor legislation. And yet these same men dare to claim that they are concerned with the welfare of the people.

Tells of Own Experiences.

"Let me tell you briefly what happened in my State. It is of particular and immediate interest since it has a bearing on the great social program of the Federal Government and shows so clearly the difference in the point of view of Democrats and Republican leadership. It is significant because of the position held by New York Republican leaders in the National Republican Party and program. It is important because it portrays the attitude of Republican leadership in many other States.

"The minimum-wage act for women and children was bitterly opposed by Republican leadership. Today when many of them believe that the act has been killed by judicial edict they may claim sympathy for it and give lip service to the principle of protecting women and children in industry. But the fact is that in 1933, when the bill was enacted, a large number of Republicans, including the Republican leaders in both houses of the New York Legislature, voted against it.

"There was nothing in that bill that could possibly have called forth any conscientious objection or opposition and yet we find that the Republican legislative leaders voted against it. Opposition to it was of the same cruel, callous and reactionary character that has marked the record of the Republican leaders in my State for the past 20 years. This record assumes particular importance when they are seeking to tear down a great program of social reform sponsored by the President for the benefit of the Nation as a whole.

"I have never in my public life been more deeply disappointed or grieved than when the New York minimum wage act was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court by a divided vote of 5 to 4. With all my heart I pray that the rehearing by the Supreme Court for which we have asked will be granted and that the law will still be declared constitutional.

"If the Supreme Court finds it cannot hold the minimum wage act valid, it is my firm belief and my earnest hope that, through orderly constitutional amendment, the States and the Federal Government be given ample powers to assure working women and minors decent wages and hours and to establish a broad program of social security.

Quotes Foes' Platform.

"The indifference of national Republican political leadership to social legislation is unmistakably disclosed by its attitude toward unemployment insurance. The Republican platform adopted in Cleveland contains this deeply significant statement: 'We propose to encourage adoption by the States and Territories of honest and practical measures for meeting the problems of unemployment insurance. The unemployment insurance and old age annuity sections of the present social security act are unworkable.' What hypocrisy!

"If those words had been written a hundred feet high, they could not more clearly serve notice that if the Republican Party gains control of our Government next November the Nation-wide establishment of unemployment insurance will be completely destroyed. The Federal act, of course, will be repealed and there will be no chance whatsoever of any substantial number of States adopting unemployment insurance.

"The political leaders of the Republican Party, when they wrote those words, knew, as do all of us, that an effective system of unemployment insurance cannot possibly be enacted save on the basis of minimum standards set by the Federal Government for the Nation as a whole. The very men who now say "we will encourage the adoption of unemployment insurance by the States and Territories" will be the first to oppose the adoption of unemployment insurance by any single State unless all the other States in the same industrial competitive class have the same statute. That was the position taken by their party in New York State and I am sure the same will be true in other States.

Equal Plane Essential.

"There is no use in mincing words or in closing our eyes to established facts. It must be clear to the working people of America that any substantial movement for unemployment insurance is impossible unless all the States are on an equal plane for minimum standards of cost as provided by the Wagner social security act.

"The philosophy of the Republican political leadership with regard to social security was dramatically demonstrated last spring in New York. A social security bill, closely following the lines of the Federal act, was introduced early in the session. It provided, in cooperation with the Federal government, for assistance to the needy aged, dependent mothers and children, the blind, sick and crippled. The bill passed the Senate. It went to the Republican assembly, where it was immediately buried in committee.

"On three separate occasions the handful of powerful and thoroughly reactionary Republican leaders, who controlled the Assembly, were able to strangle and kill social security in the State of New York. For a time he had believed that their action was only another example of a short-sighted policy to oppose a Democratic Governor or was caused by the hope of weakening in his own State the sponsor of the Federal security act—the President of the United States.

"But then we learned out of the mouth of the reactionary Republican leaders themselves the fundamental reason why they insisted on killing social security. It was made perfectly clear that opposition of these Republican leaders was based on a bourdon philosophy of Government as reactionary as any I have known.

"That attitude of New York Republicans reflects the point of view of much of the powerful leadership of the Republican Party in the Nation—which, if successful in this election, will scrap much of the social legislation that has come to us through the humanity and vision of our great President.

"The issue in the National election is a clear and simple one. It is just this. Shall we, in this country, continue to recognize that Government has a duty to provide social security for its people along the broad lines which have been laid down during the past four years, or are we willing supinely to accept the ghastly and anti-social philosophy which says that beyond giving bread to the destitute, government shall not go? President Roosevelt's social security program is, in my opinion, the most humane, the most beneficial measure of our life time. Are we to allow it to be hog-tied and even killed by the forces of merciless reaction? We are very confident of the answer that the American people will give to Franklin Delano Roosevelt."

In concluding, Lehman declared that the President has "not weakened American institutions and principles; quite the contrary, he has preserved and strengthened them"—maintaining for the country enjoyment of those liberties of freedom of thought and expressions, religious and racial tolerance and "the freedom of the individual as an independent citizen in a revitalized and more democratic democracy."

Text of Judge Mack's Speech Nominating Roosevelt

Philadelphia, June 26.—The text of the speech by Judge John E. Mack, of New York, nominating President Roosevelt for another four-year term in the White House, follows:

Mr. Chairman and Delegates to the Democratic National Convention:

We meet again. Four years ago we met at a period of great concern, a period of depression and dissatisfaction, and a period of widespread alarm as to our farming and business prospects and the future of our country as a whole.

At that time, the convention had promised an earnest, sincere and determined effort, under the leadership of a man whose courage was unquestioned, to bring about a recovery from ills accentuated and increased by Republican uncertainty and instability.

We now meet after three years of such effort. We meet to account for our stewardship, and to give to the people the man best calculated to succeed in carrying out and continuing the rehabilitation so quickly begun and so successfully carried out since 1933.

Were Raised as Boys.

I am here to nominate such a man. Probably because I have such an intimate knowledge of his early history, I have been selected for the honor of presenting him to you.

We were raised as boys in adjoining towns, but with different horizons. My horizon was the Hudson valley—his the universe.

I was his senior in years. As a Democratic officeholder, I presented his name as our candidate for State Senator in 1910. I believe I knew him better than most of his constituents. I told them that this young man was ready to carry out the heritage of his birth, to give his time and his life for the benefit of his State and his country.

His district was almost hopelessly Republican. With his usual perseverance and courage he stumped it in company with Dick Connell, a much older man, the Democratic candidate for Congress.

Dick had been the perennial Democratic candidate in this wholly Republican district. Whenever he came to a little old red country schoolhouse, he went in and made a speech on patriotism to the pupils and teacher—and he whispered to his younger co-candidate, "you know, if I live long enough for these children to grow up, they will vote for me and in time elect me."

Grew Into a Reality.

This vision grew into a reality in 1910 because the Congressman and Senator were both swept into office.

From the beginning our nominee, although coming from a distinguished family, fought the fight of the common people, and against the domination of the railroads, then at the height of their power. He opposed the influence of financial interests in politics and government.

He showed a complete understanding for the farmers who had just come through a period of depression and farm foreclosures. He opposed the efforts of the chamber of commerce in his district to freeze out industries which paid their employes a living wage. He opposed the blacklist, secretly managed by manufacturers' associations.

Took Up Fight for People.

When this young man arrived in Albany, he found that a leader of his own party was about to send to Washington as United States Senator a man definitely tied up with a powerful and selfish traction interest.

He immediately took up the fight against this betrayal of the people's trust. He continued it with such determination and unflinching courage that the nomination was blocked and there was selected as United States Senator a lawyer and judge of unquestioned probity and integrity.

The triumphant re-election of our nominee was proof of the confidence the people of his district had in him, and a recognition of his leadership in the State Senate. It was also a demonstration of the fact that he represented not any particular interest, but the entire people.

His service in the New York Legislature directed the attention of this Nation to this young man. He was invited to become Assistant Secretary of the Navy by President Woodrow Wilson, a post formerly filled by his illustrious cousin.

Here again were shown his determination and ability to get at the bottom of things. He familiarized himself with every detail of the Navy. He covered and became familiar with the needs of every part of the country, and took an active part in the World War both here and in Europe.

At San Francisco in 1920 his party recognized his fighting ability by nominating this young man for the office of Vice President. His brave fight and his noteworthy loyalty to his chief are history now. Outstanding above all in that campaign was his sportsmanship in defeat. "He could take it."

Then in 1921 came the sudden affliction which seemed to all of us would forever remove this young man from public life.

"A Greater Capacity."

We did not know in those days that Providence was only preparing him for the greater work the future had in store for him. I had not then studied Emerson's essay on the law of compensation. No one can have full sympathy for the misfortunes of others until and unless he has suffered himself.

All of the suffering through which he has gone has broadened his heart, has given him a greater capacity for sympathy and understanding of human needs of all kinds. It prepared him, for the stricken Nation which was placed in his hands on March 4, 1933; it prepared him for the emergency and radical surgery necessary to rid the body corporate of the diseases which beset it.

As an early evidence of this sympathy he undertook the assistance of crippled children that they might receive the benefit of greater efforts to make their lives a bit more happy and more complete.

Home Life Was Typical.

During all these years the home life of this young man remained typically American. He lived in his home at Hyde Park; he managed the farm, happy with his trees and his fields. Years ago he started soil conservation on the rough portions of his own farm by the planting of evergreens. It was one of the earliest examples of the proper use of land.

He maintained the same friendly contact with his neighbors and with the people of his own home county, alive to their personal problems and to general local business affairs, content in the friendship of his Dutchess County friends.

Happy in the knowledge that he was pulling his own weight in the boat, in 1928 he came back to public life in New York State, not because of any political ambition of his own, but solely in answer to the call of friendship.

He came to 1932 with a background of four successful years as Governor of the Empire State. Despite an opposition majority in the legislative body, his every nomination had been confirmed, and nearly every important proposition submitted by him was ultimately approved and put into legislative form. In his own State, as Governor, he came to be known as the champion of the liberties of the plain people.

In 1932, not only the Democratic Party, but the entire country were on the lookout for a man of broad vision, one conscious that the prosperity of the United States depended upon the well-being of the entire people and not of any special class.

It had at last become apparent that the great banking and financial and business interests had through mismanagement, lack of foresight and lack of prudence brought their temple down upon their own heads.

Confidence Was Lost.

When the crash came, neither the bankers, nor big business, nor the administration which had given them aid and comfort had any workable suggestions for relief.

It is true that some aid was extended to certain favorite banks and institutions, but the chief wail we heard was "that prosperity was just around the corner." The people had lost confidence. Six thousand banks had failed, bankruptcy was rampant throughout the land.

The country, led by the Democratic Party, turned to this young Galahad for relief, for aid and for help.

Came to the Presidency.

As a result, on March 4, 1933, there came to the City of Washington, as the Chief Executive of the United States, a man with this splendid background and thorough training, filled with relentless determination to rejuvenate this Nation, to break down special privilege and to place this country on a permanently sound and stable footing.

He surrounded himself in his Cabinet with the most able and progressive representatives in the Union. He did not wait for prosperity to come around the corner. He knew that the best defense to depression was an attack. He saw that unless something was done at once starvation would soon face the United States.

With the aid of his splendid Cabinet, with the aid of a Democratic Congress and with the aid of the forward-looking, country-loving and farseeing progressives and Republicans, he proceeded to place this country on its feet.

We have blazed a path to prosperity and security. Our faces are toward progress. We shall not turn back in this conflict between greed and humanity.

Our friendly enemies—friendly until the approaching election—cheerful until the approaching election, suddenly discover that the Nation is going to the dogs.

Whence come these cries? Not from the farm owner and home owner whose properties have been saved from foreclosure.

Not from the million and a half boys who have obtained employment in the CCC camps.

Not from the millions who have received employment through the instrumentality of the relief and public works agencies.

Not From the Farmers.

Not from the suffering farmers whose purchasing power is being restored.

Not from the citizens of that vast section of the country where lives and property are being preserved by flood control.

Not from the millions now receiving electrical energy at a fair rate because of the efforts of the TVA, the Federal Power Authority and other instrumentalities of the Government.

Not from the small merchants and storekeepers.

Not from those having investments providing moderate living incomes.

Not from the millions of workers for whose benefit we have endeavored to insure a living wage.

From where then arise the cries of anger and the vicious attacks?

Blames the Financiers.

From those who themselves brought about the great depression. From the great financial interests whose high-powered salesmen induced foreign countries unnecessarily to plunge themselves into debt and unload their bonds on trusting American investors—bonds many of which are now in default and practically worthless.

From the same great financial interests that pyramided company upon company for the purpose of rooking the investing public by watered stock and cheating the consuming public by inflated rates.

All of these great financial and business interests at the outset led in the acclaim for the courage of our leader and his splendid attempts to afford relief. Why this ungratefulness now? Why these complaints?

Their Influence Gone.

Every American knows the answer. These classes of privilege have seen the handwriting on the wall. They know that under this Administration the power and influence over government which their wealth had given them are now gone.

They know, from the new laws supervising holding companies, regulating of the sale of securities, from the social security act, and from the new tax laws, along with a score of other measures, that the control of legislation has passed from their hands to the people themselves.

The issue is now whether the people are going to retain that control of the processes of government or whether they are going to turn them back to this same small group whose destructive abuse of their former power was responsible for all our troubles.

We are ready for the issue. We have ended starvation, bread lines, soup kitchens, and have brought this country through the greatest depression ever known.

We Are Moving Forward.

With increasing national income and increasing national prosperity, we are moving forward. The credit for all this improvement is due to our leader, his splendid Cabinet and the splendid Congress which backed him to the last ditch.

He is willing to take responsibility. He fears not those who are dissatsified, nor do we fear criticism. The great masses of the people of the United States are well aware of our condition in 1933, and of our condition in 1936.

With our decks cleared for battle, with justice and right and progress with us, we are ready for more action under the inspired leadership of that great American whose name I give you as your candidate for President, no longer a citizen merely of one State, but a son of all the 48 States, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The President Is Nominated By Convention

President Roosevelt. Not even indirectly did he refer to that attack on the New Deal.

With the nomination of President Roosevelt tonight, only the business of nominating Garner for the Vice Presidency stood between the convention and adjournment sine die, and the reception of President Roosevelt to make his acceptance speech in what is expected to be the climax of the week of Democratic oratory and activities.

The President and Mr. Garner—the latter arrived in the city tonight—will accept their nominations tomorrow night in Franklin Field Stadium before an audience of 100,000—that is, if the stadium is filled. Convention managers took care to see to that today by repeatedly announcing free tickets for the affair, although earlier in the week they were being sold for $1 each.

Reports were in circulation tonight that Mr. Roosevelt planned a surprise in his acceptance speech, but its nature was not intimated. In view of the Messianic halo placed around the President's head during the convention session today, and the unbroken series of speeches, Mr. Roosevelt faces a difficult task if he is to stir these oratory-satiated Democrats.

This oratory started shortly past noon and continued for more than 3 hours. It was resumed again at 8 p. m. (standard time) and went on without interruption until close to midnight.

Even then it was brought to an end only by repeated admonitions by Chairman Joe Robinson to speakers to keep their remarks brief. Though these fulsome laudations of the President—most of them following the same pattern—became monotonous to the press gallery early in the day, the delegates and spectators did not become bored until the midnight hour, daylight time, was passed.

The spectators went home in great numbers and the delegates undertook to stop the speeches with outbursts of jeering at the more lengthy speakers. When the American high commissioner to the Philippine Islands confined his remarks to the one sentence, "It is with honor that on behalf of the Philippine Islands I second the nomination of Franklin Delano Roosevelt," he was given a brief ovation.

Walsh Ends Speech.

John Walsh, of the District of Columbia delegation, insisted on going through with his speech and suffered only the stamping of some impatient feet. The Hawaiian delegation said it with music—sending a native quartet with guitars to the rostrum. Joseph Alexander, on behalf of the Virgin Islands, brought the seconding speeches to an end.

Several of the seconding speeches were suspected of lukewarmness in behalf of President Roosevelt—since they seemed to damn by faint praise—but this was more than offset by the extreme and extravagant praise heaped on him from every other quarter, beginning with Judge Mack.

Judge Mack in a simple and straightforward manner and without effort at oratorical effect placed the President's name before the convention. Yet an orator was not needed to stir this convention into a wild ovation for President Roosevelt.

The convention simply went wild—indeed, the word mad would not be out of place, so loudly and so lengthily did delegates, alternates and the spectator-filled galleries cheer and shriek strange yells when Judge Mack brought his speech to a close with these words:

"With our decks cleared for battle; with justice, right and progress with us, we are ready for more action under the inspired leadership of that great American whose name I give you as your candidate for President, no longer a citizen merely of one State, but a son of all the 48 States—Franklin Delano Roosevelt."

That was the climax of an address which reviewed the Roosevelt career—starting from the boyhood days which the nominator and the candidate spent together in the Hudson River Valley to the latter's ascent into the White House, where he became, as Judge Mack asserted, a young Galahad who started his country back on "a path to prosperity and security."

After the convention rang with an ear-splitting din for one hour, Permanent Chairman Joe Robinson vainly tried to restore order and even sent Gov. Bibb Graves of Alabama, with the first seconding speech, to howl into the face of this yelling mob.

Like a man trying to throw his voice against a gale at sea, Gov. Graves, despite the loud speakers, could not be heard 10 feet from where he stood, so noisy were the floor demonstrators. But finally the delegates were brought to silence and the seconding speeches went on.

Judge Mack in beginning his nominating speech recalled the meeting four years ago when Franklin Roosevelt was first projected as the National standard bearer of his party. Then, he said, "we met at a period of great concern, a period of depression and dissatisfaction and a period of widespread alarm as to our farming and business prospects and the future of our country as a whole."

Now "we meet to account for our stewardship and to give to the people the man best calculated to succeed in carrying out and continuing the rehabilitation so quickly begun and so successfully carried out since 1933," he said.

Recites Early Career.

He went on to recite the early history of "such a man" from his boyhood days in Dutchess County, New York, his service as a State Senator at Albany, his tenure as Assistant Secretary of the Navy during the Great War, his nomination as his party's Vice Presidential candidate in 1920, his affliction, his fight for the recovery of his health, his return to public life as the Governor of the Empire State, and finally, his great triumph when he was selected as the leader of his Nation.

This elderly friend of the President explained his sympathy with crippled children, the development of a sense of social justice and decency. He explained that his candidate throughout his life had remained "typically American," managing his parents' farm as a youth and inaugurating soil conservation on that land by planting evergreens.

When he became Governor of his State he came to be known as "the champion of the liberties of the plain people," asserted Judge Mack, explaining that in 1932 when the country searched for "a man of broad vision, one conscious that the prosperity of the United States depended upon the well-being of the entire people and not of any special class," they turned to President Roosevelt.

Recalls the Break.

Pausing a moment to look back to 1932, Judge Mack asserted that "it had at last become apparent that the great banking and financial and business interests had through mismanagement, lack of foresight and lack of prudence brought their temple down upon their own heads."

He contended that when the crash came neither the bankers nor big business nor the administration "which had given them aid and comfort" had ready any workable suggestions for relief. The people, he said, had lost confidence, banks were failing by the thousands and bankruptcy was rampant throughout the land—and then came this "young Galahad," who had been Judge Mack's boyhood friend.

With obvious pride in his voice and manner, Judge Mack recited how President Roosevelt came to the White House "filled with relentless determination to rejuvenate the Nation, to break down special privilege and to place this country on a permanently sound and stable footing."

He did not "wait for prosperity to come around the corner," asserted Judge Mack, amid laughter—"he proceeded to place this country on its feet." And he succeeded in "blazing a path to prosperity and security."

Blames Interests.

Judge Mack promised "we shall not turn back in this conflict between greed and humanity." He undertook to analyze the source of the criticism of the President, asserting it came not from the various groups aided and rehabilitated by the New Deal, but "from those who themselves brought about the great depression—from the great financial interests whose high-powered salesmen induced foreign countries unnecessarily to plunge themselves into debt and unload their bonds on trusting American investors—bonds many of which are now in default and practically worthless."

He accused these enemies of the New Deal with ingratitude, asserting they at the outset acclaimed "the courage of our leader and his splendid attempts to afford relief."

The answer, he asserted, was that they had seen "the handwriting on the wall," they knew that under this Administration "the power and influence over government which their wealth had given them is now gone." He said they knew from the New Deal measures enacted that "the control of legislation has passed from their hands to the people themselves."

"People's Control" Issue.

"The issue is now whether the people are going to retain control of the processes of government or whether they are going to turn them back to this same small group whose destructive abuse of their former power was responsible for all our trouble."

He said the party was ready for the issue—that having ended starvation and having brought the country through "the greatest depression ever known," the Democrats were now moving forward.

It was then that he reached the climax of his address by mentioning for the first time the name of Franklin D. Roosevelt—a name which threw the convention into a mad frenzy which lasted more than one hour.

The seconding speeches consumed the attention of the audience for several hours more before a recess was taken until the night session. Shouting eulogies of President Roosevelt, spokesmen for every State from Alabama down to Nevada appeared before the convention to be cheered and applauded during the afternoon session.

When the convention resumed its meeting this evening, the roll call started with Nevada, followed by New Jersey, represented by Mrs. Mary T. Norton, chairman of the House District of Columbia Affairs Committee, and then came New Mexico. New York was passed over temporarily in order to give Gov. Herbert H. Lehman better radio time.

On went the parade of seconders—some confining themselves to two or three minutes, others using as much as eight or 10 minutes, down through the roll call of the States. Virtually all lauded the President as a humanitarian, as the man who rescued his country from the economic crisis and as a man who was putting down greed and special privilege.

Some undertook to assail Gov. Alf M. Landon and to make references comparing his record with that of the President. The delegates cheered one and all—with the State whose representative was speaking leading brief demonstrations—the greatest of which was that for Gov. Lehman.

And then came the renomination of the President.

Philadelphia, June 26.—Delegates from all the States and Territories of the Nation rose to second the nomination of President Roosevelt in Convention Hall today and tonight.

"The sentiment of Illinois was eloquently expressed in our recent primary," declared Gov. Henry Horner, of Illinois. The tribute of Senator George McGill, of Kansas, was:

"Kansas is proud to have the opportunity to second the nomination of the man who promoted policies of the Government which have brought us out of the depression; one of the greatest hunmanitarians who ever occupied the high office of President; one who has done more to benefit the farmer, honest business, labor, the underprivileged and the needy than any man of contemporary time."

Tydings Make Seconding Talk

Philadelphia, June 26.—Succumbing to intensive pressure from party leaders here, Senator Millard E. Tydings, of Maryland, today consented to make a seconding speech in nomination of President Roosevelt.

Tydings' original reluctance to make such a speech was so well known that William Stanley, of Laurel, Md., former Assistant Attorney General of the United States, was picked for the place in the spotlight and was scheduled to make the speech.

Seeking the names of more heavyweight seconders, the chiefs here worked on Senator Tydings yesterday until he yielded and mad a very brief address, which was held here to be of the "damn-by faint-praise" type.

His speech follows:

"Remembering that since the World War our relationship has changed from that of a debtor and exporting country to that of a creditor and exporting country and that in spite of this fundamental change the party of Harding, Coolidge and Hoover pursued policies diametrically opposed to a sound and lasting economy and prosperity, finally resulting on March 4, 1933, in 12,000,000 unemployed, the loss of our world markets, in closed factories, the sale of nearly 2,000,000 homes, in town and county, with agricultural prices at less than the cost of production and the attendant loss of spiritual, moral, material and intellectual values and remembering that these unsound policies are being gradually supplanted with changes which are winning back human and material values and heritages, the Democratic Party of the Free State of Maryland, united, determined and in fighting mood, pledges its enthusiastic and loyal support to the great fighter who stood upon the frontiers of chaos and despair and who has battled for the rights of mankind—Franklin D. Roosevelt."

RigidEconomy, Stable Money Urged by Knox

By the Associated Press.

Manchester, N. H., June 26.—Col. Frank Knox, of Chicago, addressing a public rally in his honor as Republican Vice Presidential nominee, pledged himself tonight to support six points of Government policy for which he said New England long has stood.

The points are:

1. A rigid economy in public expenditures.
2. A budget swiftly brought into balance and kept there.
3. The maintenance of a sound, stable currency.
4. The protection of the National credit through fulfillment of every promise uttered.
5. The preservation of the principle of local self-government.
6. The maintenance in its full integrity of the judicial authority.

The Chicago and Manchester publisher said he spoke "as a New Englander to New Englanders."

The rally in the municipal stadium was attended by thousands. Col. Knox is here for two weeks' vacation at his summer home in the city where he came to live more than 20 years ago.

Gov. H. Styles Bridges and former United States Senator George H. Moses, Republicans, were among the speakers. Representatives from each of the State's ten counties were present and the committee in charge included members of both major political parties.

"Loyal to Tradition."

"If I am to be true to the spirit of the New England to which I was born, loyal to the traditions I absorbed in my years of life spent with you, I must stand for principles in government and administration that are typified by New England itself," Col. Knox declared.

"No man could even remotely represent your purpose and spirit who did not regard the safeguarding of money raised by taxes as a secred trust—who did not seek to insure its wise and prudent expenditure with a far greater concern than in the disbursement of his own private funds," he continued.

"No man could be your representative and look lightly upon the practice of spending over a long period of time more than you take in.

"No man could truly speak for you who condoned progressive debasement of the dollar by which your savings are measured.

"No man could reflect your will who was indifferent to the rigid fulfillment of your Government's promises to pay.

"Your trust and confidence after two decades lived among you," he declared "is, to me, one of the great prizes of life."

Landon Catches Three Fish.

Estes Park, Colo., June 26 (AP).—His prowess as a fisherman already demonstrated for the benefit of his breakfast table, Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, cast a speculative eye on mountains surrounding his vacation home today.

"A peak behind the ranch house looks interesting," he said, after telling newspapermen he might do some climbing.

The Kansan, driven into the village of Estes Park for a press conference, said he had gone fishing this morning "for a couple of hours before breakfast" and "caught three rainbow trout."

"I had one of them for breakfast," he added.

They were a "little over the limit," he said. The minimum in Colorado is 7 inches.

Daughter With Him.

The Governor's daughter, Peggy Ann, 19, drove him to Estes Park from the ranch, 7 miles from here. Both were dressed in riding clothes and two horses were brought out for the Governor's use.

He did permit politics to interfere briefly with the holiday on which he said he was "having a great time." He conferred with Philip S. Rose, editor of The Country Gentleman, who came away from the meeting predicting Landon "can carry the Middle West."

Rose, who came here to speak before the American Society of Agricultural Engineers, said the Democratic farm plank "means continuation of the present policy of regimentation and regulation—that is, the people will be told what they can plant and what they can't plant."

Democrat Party Passes Sold for $1

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, June 26.—A mixup in the distribution of tickets to the Democratic notification ceremonies at Franklin Field tomorrow night led to the sale of some passes at $1 each and the free distribution of thousands of others.

Charles Michelson, Democratic publicity chief, said today the mistake resulted from activities of the "Roosevelt Nominators" organization, which has been selling tickets to ceremonies in other cities as a means of raising campaign funds.

A start was made on the sale of tickets here, he said, until it was learned that the Democratic National Committee intended that they should be free.

"Anybody who bought one of the tickets here," Michelson said, "Can come and get his money back."

Women Plan Coalition To Oppose New Dealers

New York, June 26 (AP).—Mrs. Mabel Jacques Eichel, of Wilton, Conn., announced here today that a "Nation-wide women's coalition" will be formed Tuesday and Wednesday in Toledo "to work for the election of anti-New Deal candidates for Federal offices."

She said that delegates representing 1,000,000 voters in New York and 24 other States would meet in Toledo.

"They are women who believe in the American form of government," said Mrs. Eichel, "and who are convinced that the New Deal violates these principles."

Tour Is Opened In New Jersey By Hamilton

By the United Press.

Plainsboro, N. J., June 26.—John D. M. Hamilton, Republican national committeeman, tonight opened a Nation-wide campaign for his party's ticket with a vigorous plea to New Jersey Republicans to "turn out the vote" for Gov. Alf M. Landon, Presidential nominee, or face the possibility of losing the election.

Addressing his first Republican rally in a tour which he expects will take him to almost every State in the Union, Hamilton pointed out that New Jersey went Democratic in 1932 by "only 35,000 votes" and that "this is easily made up." He was enthusiastically greeted upon his arrival from Washington.

"I'm not out selling my candidate," he said. "I don't have to. But I came out endeavoring to bring out the necessity for concerted action. This is a fight that we are going to win . . . we have rested on our oars too long. It is now time to roll up our sleeves."

Hamilton said the election will depend on two things—the vote of the women and the vote of the "youngsters under 30."

"If you don't get out this vote, you may not win this election," he warned. "Frankly, I tell you I don't think anyone can keep us from winning the election if we do our best work during the campaign."

Republican State Chairman Henry W. Jeffers charged that the Democratic Party was coercing WPA workers to contribute party funds.

"James A. Farley today made it clear that in New Jersey a man's hunger shall be determined by the way he votes," Jeffers said.

"A numbered card was handed each WPA worker with the warning that he must sign it and return it with $1 to become a 'Roosevelt nominator.' . . . This action amounts clearly to political terrorism and represents a callous, despicable use of relief funds for partisan purposes."

The cards, he said, carried the words: "Summons to contribute $1 to the Democratic campaign chest."

Two-Third Rule 'Noes' Surpass 'Ayes' in Noise

Philadelphia, June 26 (AP).—The Democrats abrogated the two-third rule, but a check of the convention's applause indicator showed the "Noes" made more noise than the votes for scrapping the rule.

The recording:

Ayes—58 decibels.
Noes—64 decibels.

Sound technicians hastened to explain, however, that "No" has a deeper sound volume than "Aye." They also pointed out that persons in the galleries participated in the voice vote.

Garner Arrives InPhiladelphia, Speaks to Club

The Vice President arrived at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel in an automobile preceded by 20 motorcycle police. The square in front of the hotel was cleared of traffic and about 300 policemen stood shoulder to shoulder along the curbs. At the hotel he was greeted by the Texas delegation, wearing their 10-gallon hats.

Garner had been expected to speak at the banquet of the Young Democratic Clubs of America. Accompanied by National Chairman James A. Farley, he appeared at the banquet.

"I belong to a firm the senior partner of which does all the talking," he explained to the dinner guests. "I do all the work."

With that he bowed and left. Farley rushed to the convention hall and Garner to his hotel. He said he did not intend to attend the convention. He will deliver his acceptance speech at Franklin Field tomorrow night, when he and President Roosevelt are notified formally of their nomination.

Among the speakers at the Young Democratic dinner were Senator Guffey, of Pennsylvania; Gov. Earle, of Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Anne Guffey Miller, Pennsylvania Democratic national committeewoman.

Party Platform Is 'Monstrous,' Reed Charges

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, June 26.—Saying "the lines are now clearly defined," James A. Reed, former Democratic United States Senator from Missouri, issued a statement tonight assailing the party platform and program as "monstrous doctrines."

It was Reed's first statement since, with Alfred E. Smith and three other Democrats, he signed an appeal prior to the Democratic National Convention asking the gathering not to rename President Roosevelt.

Tonight Reed said "the platform taken together with the keynote speeches of the convention . . . make it perfectly plain that the policies heretofore insisted upon by Roosevelt are to be carried out if the Democratic Party succeeds at the election."

New Deal policies he summarized as three—regimentation of agriculture, reincarnation of the NRA and control of the Supreme Court.

Of the agricultural policy he said: "No matter how disguised by soft phrases or by doubtful terms, the farmer is to be reduced to a condition bordering on serfdom.

"The pill may be sugar-coated with the assurance that vast sums of money will be distributed to the farmers, but in the end those moneys must be collected from the people of the United States, and in the finality the farmers of the United States will be compelled to bear a large part of the burden."

Reed predicted that if the Supreme Court "stands in the way" an effort would be made either to "deprive that court of jurisdiction to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress, or to pack the Supreme Court by addition of other judges."

Parades Banned At Roosevelt Rally

Philadelphia, June 26 (AP).—The Democrats will have to take their Franklin Field rally tomorrow night without parades.

Col. Edwin A. Halsey, sergeant at arms of the convention, tonight warned that when they gathered there for President Roosevelt's acceptance speech, they should make all demonstrations from the place where they happened to be sitting or standing.

"There are about 25,000 temporary seats placed on the football field at Franklin Field," he said. "These seats are not fastened and if there should be any excitement and anyone were to fall, it is feared that there may be serious injury to the persons on the field."

Harris Denies Coercion in Sale Of Dance Tickets to WPA Aids

Maj. John E. Harris, supervisor of WPA projects located in the basement of the Washington Auditorium, expressed himself as "completely satisfied" yesterday that there was no politics or coercion in the sale of tickets to a dance at the Willard Hotel Thursday night.

Informed of a complaint by a WPA worker that one unit chief on Tuesday requested those working under him to be prepared to work overtime Thursday night and that the following day sale of tickets to a dance on this "overtime" night was launched with the co-operation of this unit chief, Maj. Harris demanded an explanation from the official.

On the dance tickets was printed the hotel, name of the band, date and admission price and in the lower right hand corner a dotted line with instructions that the card be signed. This signature, it had been charged was demanded to check up on those who went to the dance.

The explanation to Maj. Harris of how these tickets with their signature request came to be sold to WPA clerks was as follows:

Several WPA workers thought it would be a good idea to hold a get-together dance to permit the many newcomers to get acquainted. They suggested the idea to a band leader who agreed to furnish the music. The profits were to go to the WPA athletic fund.

With this dance in mind, the explanation continued, the unit chief requested one of his assistants to ask the clubs in the section to keep the dance night open. For some unexplained reason, the assistant "mistook" the request for a demand that the clerks be prepared to work overtime and put out a memorandum to that effect.

The signatures on the tickets was requested, Maj. Harris explained, "evidently" so that the band leader "could get up a mailing list for his own use."

Asked whether there wasn't a regulation forbidding the sale of tickets, soliciting of subscriptions on Government premises without authorization, Maj. Harris did not seem certain whether such a regulation would apply in the case of the tickets.

"I'd be the first person to want to know if there was any coercion in the sale of these tickets," he said, "but there's no proof of coercion.

"Yes, I'm completely satisfied with the explanation I got this afternoon," he declared.

S. C. Delegates Urge Drawing Of Color Line

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, June 26.—A resolution protesting against the presence of colored persons on the program of the Democratic National Convention was adopted unanimously today by the South Carolina delegation.

Adoption of the resolution, later presented to the national executive committee, came as an aftermath to a second "wauk out" by Senator E. D. Smith, a delegate-at-large, when Representative Arthur Mitchell, of Chicago, only colored member of Congress, addressed the convention last night.

Smith's first walk out was staged when a colored minister offered invocation at Wednesday morning's session.

The resolution also asked the national committee to notify the South Carolina delegation of any further presence of colored persons on the program.

Comment in State.

His former opponent and colleague, Col. L. Blease, J. Ross Hanahan, Charleston business man; Dr. W. H. Perrin, Union County Democratic chairman; L. G. Southard, Spartanburg attorney, and others sent him messages of congratulations.

N. J. Frederick, Columbia colored attorney and counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, commented that Smith's walkout during prayer was "discouraging, to say the least."

Heretofore, racial prejudice and intolerance have not manifested themselves in the domain of religion, and it comes now as a shock to realize that even there its hold is so strong. Colored people will, however, continue to pray and they will not exclude Senator Smith."

A. S. Salley, State historian, meanwhile pointed out that Smith served four years in the South Carolina House of Representatives with colored Democrats from Georgetown County, in 1896-1900, but explained:

"A great many of the most respectable white people of the early 80's and 90's sat in the Legislature with a dozen Democratic Negroes."

Rep. Lemke Leaves To Open Offices

Detroit, June 26 (AP).—Representative William Lemke (Republican), North Dakota, Presidential candidate of the Union Party, left tonight for Chicago to open national headquarters for his campaign. He had conferred with Father Charles E. Coughlin yesterday and today.

Thomas C. O'Brien, of Boston, the Union Party's candidate for Vice President, who participated in the conferences here, is returning to New York.

Lemke said the third party movement "is making progress that I did not think possible at this early stage," and predicted that it would gain "impetus that will sweep us forward to the viciory that will spell economic salvation for America.

Dry Party Fills Ticket Vacancy

Chicago, June 26 (AP).—Claude A. Watson, Los Angeles attorney, was announced today as the Vice Presidential candidate of the Prohibition Party.

Watson replaces Alvin York, war hero, who declined the nomination proffered him by the party's National convention which met in Niagara Falls, N. Y., May 7.

Edward E. Blake, national chairman of the party, who announced Watson's selection by the executive committee, said York explained he was a Democrat and would not oppose that party.

Blake said Watson had telegraphed his acceptance today.

Inquiries Ordered In Gadsden Attack

The Labor Department and the National Labor Relations Board yesterday ordered representatives to investigate disorders Thursday at Gadsden, Ala., in which a group of union organizers was attacked by a mob.

Thomas F. Burns, of Akron, Ohio, vice president of the United Rubber Workers Union, whose organizers allegedly were in the group attacked, said here yesterday the union would withhold further action until it had investigated the disturbance.

Burns said he had conferred in Philadelphia with President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, and John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers. He said it had been decided to have a committee of rubber, steel, and textile representatives investigate the situation.

The Labor Board acted after charges were filed with it yesterday by the Rubber Workers Union.

"The police were notified 45 minutes before the attack," Burns said. "The union workers' office was less than 100 yards from the police station and on the same street, but the police did not arrive until after it was all over. I won't say that there was collusion but it certainly was a matter of negligence."

Tanker Is in Distress Off Coast of Korea

San Francisco, June 26 (U.P.).—The S. S. Magnolia, 6,000-ton tanker of the General Petroleum Co., was in serious distress and asking immediate aid near Ross Island, off the coast of Korea, the marine department of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce reported today.

The Radio Corporation of America reported the Japanese motorship Awaji Maru had been ordered to stand by and offer assistance to the ship, whose cargo of gasoline was leaking from large tanks in the hold.

The Isolationist Trend.

Those Americans who are convinced that isolation is an inevitably destructive ideal in a closely integrated world, and there are many of them, will find both the Republican and Democratic platforms distinctly disappointing.

The Republican plank on foreign affairs is almost completely negative; the corresponding Democratic plank is wind-blown and nebulous. Both pledge the Nation to peace. But it is dubious whether peace can be maintained by the methods, or lack of them, proposed.

The Republican Party, apparently, hopes to secure peace by forbidding the United States to join the League and the World Court, although it is a matter of record that we managed to get involved in several wars before either of these entanglements were devised to plague Senator Borah. Incidentally the present stand on the World Court is a repudiation of a plan advocated by every Republican President since McKinley.

But anyone who looks to the Philadelphia platform for solace will be utterly disappointed. The Democratic plank on foreign affairs is full of resounding generalities. With great boldness it declares that "disputes between nations should be settled by peaceful means." And the mention of neutrality is utterly meaningless. "We shall continue to observe a true neutrality in the disputes of others," it says. Unkind critics are invited to assume that this means neutrality as preserved by President Wilson.

In view of the fact that the Roosevelt Administration has sponsored and carried out a long series of reciprocal trade agreements one might have expected that the Democratic stand on foreign trade would be less tortured than the Republican. The latter reached a dismal level of inconsistency when, while urging the collection of the war debts and the expansion of American agricultural exports, it also demanded higher tariffs to protect American industry and agriculture.

But in the Democratic platform the Hull agreements are praised only by implication. It is subtly indicated that their purpose is simply to break down tariff barriers, quotas and embargoes "which have been raised against our exports" rather than to provide for reciprocal concessions that involve a lowering of barriers on both sides. And while the Democratic Party pledges itself to give American farmers and manufacturers adequate protection against dumping, in another plank, this very method is suggested for the United States itself.

Not the least interesting characteristic of the campaign is that both platforms have been so clearly drawn to appeal to isolationist support. This will make the interpretation of policy in this field by both candidates the more interesting.

Proof Of The Pudding.

The full text of the proposed new constitution for the Soviet Union is now available. It proves to be an extraordinarily interesting document both for what it contains and for what it leaves out.

If constitutional provisions are enough and, unfortunately, the history of many nations casts doubt on such an hypothesis, Russia, once this charter goes into force, will have a right to claim kinship with Great Britain, the United States, France and other nations as a truly democratic state. Nor will it make any essential difference in this regard that the economic organization of Russia will continue to be distinctly different from those of other nations.

Like them Russia will be governed by a parliament arising directly out of the popular will and responsible to it. It will guarantee to the individual freedom from arbitrary arrest, freedom of the press, speech and religion—in other words those civil liberties which are the very foundations of a democratic system and which are conspicuous by their absence in all autocratic and dictatorial regimes. But will these terms, a heritage of the English, French and American revolutions, have the same value in Russia as they do in the West?

This will be the real test of the genuineness of Russia's claim to be a democratic state. Another will be whether the Communist Party will continue to exercise its extraordinary and arbitrary power within the state, or whether it will gradually be shorn of that power.

The draft constitution is silent on this point. Article 126 suggests that the Communist Party will continue as the only political party permitted to exist and as the "vanguard of the toilers in their struggle for strengthening and developing the socialist system." But how it will function in this respect has not been explained. It will be interesting to find out.

The Platform Of A New Party.

Although his name is not mentioned, one tribute to the memory of Thomas Jefferson as the founder of the Democratic Party is paid in its 1936 platform as now adopted.

Just 160 years after Jefferson drafted the Declaration of Independence, his famous phrase—"We hold these truths to be self-evident"—is copied from that immortal document to give justification to the platform's specific pronouncements. It is a bold move, for certainly there will be differences of opinion as to the propriety of using the Declaration of Independence as a campaign document.

It is a bold move, further, because it so clearly invites comparison between the political ideals of Thomas Jefferson and those of Franklin Delano Roosevelt. There is much more in the Declaration of Independence than the assertion that certain truths are self-evident. There is, for instance, the statement that "Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes." There is also the citation of excessive bureaucracy as adequate reason for the overthrow of a government "having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these States."

Indeed, quotation from the Declaration of Independence seems almost too bold a move when it is recalled that this appeal chronicled as one of the most intolerable actions of King George III the fact that: "He has erected a multitude of new offices and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people and eat out their substance."

Had they been so minded, it appears that the Republicans could also have found some good campaign material in the Declaration of Independence.

But the Democratic platform is Jeffersonian only to the extent of describing as "self-evident truths" certain assertions, which are very far from being that to any analytical mind. The document as a whole is remarkable for the way in which it utterly repudiates the Jeffersonian principle of State's rights. The almost sarcastic reference to "48 separate State Legislatures, 48 separate State administrations and 48 separate State courts" emphasizes the platform's complete lack of sympathy with the basic idea of a Federal form of government. This platform is not designed for the United States but for a new United State.

"A decent respect for the opinions of mankind," to quote the Declaration of Independence once again, requires that the Democratic Party should declare the causes which impel it to this separation from political tradition. And a faint consciousness of their responsibility in this matter evidently influenced the drafters of the platform.

They have been at some pains to indicate their belief that the Federal system of government plays into the hands of "privileged groups," and they have also made clear their opinion that only through centralization can "government in a modern civilization" fulfill "certain inescapable obligations to its citizens."

This is, of course, an entirely tenable thesis and those who wrote the platform are to be congratulated for consistency in saying that they will not hesitate to seek a "clarifying amendment" if necessary to give the Federal Government the power President Roosevelt seeks for it. The entire platform implies that such an amendment will be necessary, unless the majority of the Supreme Court is consistently willing to interpret the wording of the Constitution with great latitude.

Like the forgotten Democratic platform of 1932, that adopted in Philadelphia this week contains much that is admirable. It has its inconsistencies, as has the current Republican platform, and it has plenty of deceptive assurances, such as "cheap power by means of the yardstick method," a method which does not figure what the taxpayer contributes. But on the whole the program of this new party is not merely an adroit and clever appeal to mass thinking. It is probably also as sincere as a political platform can be, considering the compromises which inevitably go into its construction.

Where the platform shows really appalling deficiencies is in its utter failure to distinguish between what government can and cannot do. It is the man of small and limited intelligence who believes that if he could only secure more power he would necessarily do a better job. To wipe out State lines and centralize all authority in Washington, as the platform promises, would not of itself solve a single national problem. It would not balance the budget. It would not stimulate industry. It would not increase the national income. It would not even further the more equitable distribution of what may well prove to be a diminishing national wealth.

But the centralization of power which Mr. Roosevelt demands would accomplish something very definite. It would put the American people, now absolutely protected from dictatorship by a Federal system of balanced powers, at the mercy of any President who, after bungling the delicate business of government, found it necessary to uphold a crumbling regime by force. That is the very real possibility which the Democratic platform envisages to those who care to read between its lines. That is what makes its pledge to oppose "the menace of concealed fascism" as meaningless now as many of Mr. Roosevelt's pledges of 1932 appear in retrospect.

Time out of mind, in history, sincere humanitarians have told the masses that if only they would back the individual quest for unlimited power, a new Utopia would result. Time out of mind the granting of such power has merely led to a Caesar, a Napoleon, a Mussolini or a Hitler.

To check any such autocracy in this country before it could get started our Federal system, operating with carefully designed checks and balances, was established. No vague assurances of "humanizing policies" can be allowed to tear those safeguards down.

Two-Thirds Rule.

The Democratic Party cannot be said to diverge from democratic practice by jettisoning its two-thirds rule. For the Philadelphia convention at least, and presumably for others to follow, candidates for President and Vice President will now be nominated when they have won a mere majority of delegate votes.

It was fitting that Senator Bennett Clark led the fight for abrogation of the rule. This rule denied his father, Champ Clark, the Presidential nomination at Baltimore in 1912. The rule owes its existence to Andrew Jackson, who introduced it in 1832 as a means of heading off a Senate coalition bent on nominating Calhoun rather than Van Buren as his successor in the White House. At Charleston in 1860 the rule was again invoked to win the nomination for Douglas, but not without splitting the Democrats so badly that Lincoln's election was assured.

The rule next came to the fore in Baltimore, where an effort was made to abolish it, as again at the memorable convention in Madison Square Garden where Smith and McAdoo were hopelessly deadlocked. Senator Long and others began a fight for its elimination in Chicago in 1932, but, although Mr. Roosevelt opposed the rule, he and his advisers frowned on the movement in the interests of party harmony.

This year, with no effective opposition to the President's renomination, the rule could be properly dropped—in fact, it was only under such circumstances that its repeal could be fairly proposed. The fact that the unit rule is also progressing toward abolition further indicates that no ulterior motive lurks behind the demise of the two-thirds rule.

The provision requiring that State delegations vote as a unit can be as potent a factor in autocratic control as the two-thirds rule can be potent as a safeguard against it.

Hard Reading.

English teachers of New York City have found from a survey of 47,000 high school students that 71 per cent of the books they read are fiction and that these are generally "cheap, tawdry and desultory." Biographies, current affairs, history, drama and poetry hold scant appeal for the pupils. To cap the teachers' chagrin, the favorite newspaper of two of the city's leading high schools is a tabloid.

How, the report on the survey gravely demands, can a young mind fed only on tabloid newspapers, cheap magazines and fiction ever rise to the responsibility of solving the social, political and economic problems that maturity brings? It is a fair question. With every sort of doctrine broadcast over the radio or dramatized on the screen, how can a democracy hope to prevail when its youth depends only on slush to sharpen its critical faculties?

The teachers conclude that they themselves are to blame. They see now that they have placed too much emphasis on the fun of reading. Eager to introduce their charges into its joys, they have not hesitated to subscribe to Cervantes' fatuous theory that "there is no book but has some good in it."

Having recognized the error of their ways, they would do well now to turn to Arnold Bennett's remark that: "It is impossible to read properly without using all one's engine-power. If we are not tired after reading, common sense is not in us."

"A hundred million cans of dog food are being eaten by the human race in the United States, and the people can't laugh that off."—Senator Dickinson. And it probably isn't very funny to the dogs, either.

An eminent vegetarian says there would be no more fighting if the diets of all peoples included a liberal amount of spinach daily. We call his attention to Pop Eye.

Passing Of The Ballad

Louise Pound in The American Scholar.

Ballad singing in America was once a dignified means of entertaining a company. There was singing at social gatherings, in parlors, in the games and dances of young persons, as well in the chimney nooks of farm houses or by the stove in the cross-roads store, in the cabin, or cornfield, or by the creek. How much less there is of it now, and how much less there will be as time goes on!

Phonographs and the radio have penetrated remote places and they have cheapened as well as multiplied the output of song. Music is now turned on rather than sung by groups or individuals. And the very multiplicity of new songs—composed for shows or as songs for sound films, or for radio singers and crooners—lowers the quality of those that are produced and impedes their chances of survival. One song has hardly achieved a degree of circulation before others crowd it out. There is little that is memorable in the texts.

Will anyone in the future wish to recover our popular song hits of today and their airs? Perhaps. But I feel no certainty of it.

Note To Senator Smith.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
I have addressed the following to Senator E. D. Smith of the South Carolina delegation at the National Democratic Convention:

It was indeed too unfortunate and regretful that on the morrow there was to be a voting on the retention of the two-thirds nomination rule; or just think, you could have left the convention and returned to your Southern State where Negroes cook for you, wash for you, nurse you (particularly Senators), spank you when you cry, serve you in restaurants and cafes, care for you when you are sick and pray that you (even you) live to witness your recovery.

When you walked out of the convention just because the Rev. Shepherd prayed, you by no means represented the entire Carolinas. You see, I am from the Carolinas too. You represented that element surrounding the cotton belts, that's why your name is "Cotton Ed." You cotton pickers ought to have a party all to yourselves, and maybe if you keep preaching that un-American political philosophy you can be a martyr to the great cause of South Carolina rebels—or should I say ignoramuses? But be careful where you preach such foolishness. When I lived down there, I thought some of those narrow things too, but thank God, I left early enough to see the true side of the race upon which you cast ill reflections.

You said you loved Negroes "in their place;" well, you evidently don't love them in South Carolina, because they are out of place there. But you should love them in Philadelphia, (at least a little), for they are more in place when they show interest in the political and economic welfare of these United States.

You say, "political equality means social equality, and social equality means inter-marriage, and that means the mongrelizing of the American race." Well, there are such things as logic and social science; I should think that those, particularly logic, would relieve you of the dilemma, the error is in your major premise.

Union Party's Appeal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
Twelve million people still hunting jobs! Millions on relief! About half of the population living below the minimum standard of subsistence. And the party in power, the great Democratic Party, headed by James Farley, throws a wild party in staid Quaker Philadelphia under the guise of a "convention." What a farce! Is that party a responsible party worthy to be returned to power for another four years?

Plenty of fireworks and firewater! Blare and ballyhoo! Is this the idea the party in power has of a suffering Nation and the solution of its problems?

Let this go on the record: None of the problems that existed when the Democrats took office in 1932 has been solved!

The convention in Cleveland of the Republican Party was not much better, but it is not in power now.

Is it any wonder then that sober, intelligent people are looking to a new third party to deliver them? What about Lemke and his Union Party with the hosts of disgruntled and suffering masses? What about the followers of Father Coughlin, Dr. Townsend and of deceased Huey Long and his share-the-wealth ideas? What is to prevent them from turning away from the two ballyhoo parties and voting for a party or a leader that has a sense of responsibility to the masses?

Suggestion To Landon.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If Gov. Landon will come out against pickets holding up people going to work, also make all unions incorporate like any big business, he will be elected President of the United States. Like Louis, the fighter, they can be licked. Just use the right hand on them.

Organizing new unions is just a racket for kickbacks. Please protect the honest workers from brutes.

Analysis Is Not Castigation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
As a constant reader of The Post, I should like to comment on a part of your editorial headed "The Keynote Speech" appearing in the issue of June 24.

You state in your editorial that "Senator Barkley significantly omitted from his prepared manuscript a very thinly veiled reference to a supposed failure of the judiciary to fulfill its national responsibility as a branch of government. He did not, however, omit an indictment of conservative constitutional interpretation of the Supreme Court."

You call the rest of the speech secondary to the "implication" in this, forgetting, perhaps, that The Post itself, in an editorial following the decision of the Supreme Court in the New York minimum wage case, severely criticized the majority decision as a strained interpretation of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Post editorial even went further and quoted that part of the dissenting opinion of Justice Stone dealing with the supposed economic "predilections" of the majority.

In view of the strong language contained in this Post editorial on the minimum wage decision, may I ask why Senator Barkley is castigated for his milder criticism? Legitimate criticism of the court is wholesome, so why exercise your prerogative and attack another for a more tempered exercise of his right? It leaves a strong impression that The Post is playing politics. In any event, how can the editorials be reconciled? Nonpartisan readers of The Post are entitled to know.

Unchanged Politics.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
Politics is a game of lying deceptions and impossible promises, said an ancient authority who called his shots.

This thought, of course, bears no relation to the job of work the New Deal traffickers in humanitarianism are about to inflict in the shape of a one-way platform, like model '32. Each and every plank carrying a stub marked: "Redeemable at Option of the Management—Void If Detected."

Since the ancient sage muttered those profound thoughts into his beard, the world as a place in which to live has changed for the better in a few respects. Why not politics?

Prize Fight Films.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
This being the nominating season, allow me to nominate for the Number 1 ranking of stupid laws the act which prohibits the showing of fight films in the District.

It is lawful to attend prize fights and see the boxers "in the flesh," but apparently the Congressional fathers deem it very demoralizing for us to witness the pictures of the same thing. To anyone who will cite me a law half as unreasonable, I will give a ticket to the next heavyweight champion fight.

A Veteran's View.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
It must have been gratifying to the veterans to hear Gov. Earle of Pennsylvania, at the opening of the Democratic convention, denounce the Hoover administration for the way it expelled the bonus army from Washington.

He made no mention of the economy act which deprived thousands of veterans of their only means of support, and reduced the pensions of widows to a mere pittance. Both political parties have given a raw deal to veterans and they don't forget.

JOSEPH M. OWENS.

Philadelphia Melodrama.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
For three long evenings the defenseless ozone has been pelted with windy gusts and verbal backdrafts from New Deal orators.

In spite of which the real keynote of the Philadelphia confab resolves itself into the familiar Farleyism: Claim everything, concede nothing. No new ingredients—or even a change in the methods of injection; but between the organ jazz and sounds of high carnival, carefully spooned doses of "rights of the pee-pul, the farmer, laborer and the downtrodden," penetrate from the lefts at Washington. Those who can't read, can swallow—and direct their vote into the proper channels.

The ace act of the carnival is the switch from politics to old-time melodrama. The New Deal clanking forth awkwardly and incongruously in the dual guise and soiled finery of Nellie the Sewing Machine Girl and Bertha the Beautiful Cloak Model—purity and virtue incarnate. And in pursuit, beaver-hatted, spatted, black-mustached villainy. Entrenched Greed and Special Privilege, foully abetted by the Liberty League in sinister collusion with "the typical prairie governor."

But at the dramatic climax: "Heaven will protect the poor working gal," the act flops as the spot goes full. The ligaments of both images merge again into the coarser likeness of Diamond Lil, with wires leading to the "smoke-filled back room," and unseen hands at the mechanism.

The Tin Can Age.

This age of science and invention really is a marvelous era. It probably will take its place in the histories of the distant future with the pre-Cambrian Age, the Paleozoic Age, even with the horse-and-buggy age. It has been demonstrated from time to time that about the moment some development seemed to be demanded by progress, someone discovered a new process or invented a new piece of machinery. And now, right at the time when it appeared we were destined to become moles, shoving around blindly under our own heaps of tin cans, a use has been found for them.

It wasn't so bad when we merely had to dispose of the salmon and sardine cans. But then came the cans containing tomatoes, corn, beans. Even then the matter was not embarrassing; we still could go out under the cover of darkness and throw them so far that no one could trace them. But then came spinach, asparagus, milk, all kinds of fruit juices, kraut, sweet potatoes, meat. We were deluged even then. But there was worse to come. Now crankcase oil comes in cans and there are mountains of beer cans. It simply isn't possible any more to throw them into the night and it doesn't seem practical to pile them in a neighbor's yard. Therefore we seemed faced with the expense of building our houses higher to get the windows above the cans. But relief is at hand.

The inventive genius of a city engineer at Decatur, Ga., offers an escape. He is building city streets with them. He heats them, piles them on the roadway, runs a 5-ton roller over them, then throws a little sand on top and rolls that. The result, so he says, is a hard-surface roadway, virtually impervious to the ravages of the weather, once the tin has been oxidized. If a depression begins to show, he simply dumps more tin cans and repeats the process.

And here the taxpayers have been paying for concrete and brick when they might have supplied all the necessary material from their own basements and yards. It is nothing less than a major scientific discovery. It is by such leaps and bounds that we have left the cave-dweller a pitiable figure in history.

The Post Impressionist

Schwarz-Sauer To Blitz-Kucha.

Post Office, Saturday.

"WHAT part of the United States has the best distinctive dishes?" casually inquires Mr. Estabrook Browne, of Chevy Chase. "Where," he interprets, "do you find the best regional cooking in America?"

The answer is that, unless you're lucky, you don't find any regional cooking anywhere in America any more. Although it is so assiduously preserved in every other country of the world—regional cooking is rapidly forsaking these United States.

However, there is no living American transplanted from his boyhood home who can't—and won't—tell Mr. Browne where you can find the best American regional cooking if you are lucky. Each living American transplanted from his boyhood home will tell you that the best American cooking is that which is, or once was, characteristic of the part of the country wherein he passed his boyhood.

So the Post-Impressionist's vote goes to the little cluster of counties still inhabited—God bless them!—by the Pennsylvania Dutch.

In his monumental volume on "The Pennsylvania-Dutch and their Cookery" (The Business Bourse, New York, Publishers), J. George Frederick puts our case clearly. And he is a Pennsylvania-Dutchman, whose wife and daughter are food experts.

Omitting—perhaps as mere modern interpolations—the Spanish Southwest, the French settlements on the hither side of Gallic Canada and all foreign islets of Nineteenth Century origin, Mr. Frederick says:

"Without disparaging New England cookery . . . it has a narrow range. Southern cookery—inclusive of the sub-regional specialties of Maryland, Virginia, South Carolina and Louisiana—is admittedly a very extensive regimen of food.

"But if one faces the fact that the Pennsylvania-Dutch territory . . . is a mere fraction of land in comparison with Southern territory . . . it becomes clear that no other small territory in the entire United States ever acquired so notable a reputation in gastronomy."

Right!

There is only one point whereon we differ from Mr. Frederick:

When he comes to the pinguid problem of fish, he implies that the Delaware River shad is the best shad.

We can't let this pass without protest.

Ask any up-State Pennsylvania-Dutchman about it. He'll say—Well, never mind what he'll say about Potomac shad. We know which side of our bread is buttered. But he'll say about the Delaware shad:

"The Delaware's got too many cities into it drainin': Delaware shad's all coal-oily. And, anyways, the Delaware's tide-water—where Delaware shad's caught. What fer shad's a tide-water shad?"

Our up-State Pennsylvania-Dutchman will argue:

The fresh-water shad—meaning the shad seined in fresh water—is the Emperor over all the Federated Fish Monarchies—or, as the case may be, their Empress. Shad are really salt-water beings—and those caught at sea are no mean creatures, either.

But shad swim up fresh-water in the spawning season. The stronger and healthier the shad the farther up fresh-water they go. Well, the farthest-from-the-sea fresh-water attained by shad anywhere is the fresh-water of the Susquehanna River at Columbia, Pa.

But for Mr. Frederick's other opinions concerning Pennsylvania-Dutch cooking we have nothing except enthusiasm. A glance through his 358 recipes will open the eyes—not to mention the mouth—of Mr. Browne or anybody else who has never eaten pepper-pot, cup-cheese, souse and scrapple in their native wilds. Our own glance long ago became a staring nostalgia.

Scrapple, souse, cup-cheese and pepper-pot? Even the cataloguing of those noble names no more than faintly adumbrates the extent of the peerage which they adorn.

There are soups of green corn and oyster plant—wine soup, cider soup, raspberry soup and apple. There are grumbera dumplings, liver dumplings, chicken floats and Boova Shenkel. There are no such sausages, smoked or unsmoked, no such apple butter, mush and pork puddings anywhere else. And, according to Mr. Frederick, on the Shrove Tuesday of last year Lancaster County alone dunked in molasses 360,000 fastnachts.

If this columnist, or Joseph Hergesheimer, were going to order a light luncheon today—and could get whatever he ordered—it would undoubtedly begin with the best of all soups: calf's head. Hassenpfeffer would follow, partridge-mit-kraut and parsnip fritters. And we'd conclude with two kinds of pie: Shoofly and Shrew-Berry Susquehanna.

* * *

Mr. Frederick is right, Mr. Browne. If you can get any pfannkuchen, try dunking some in your coffee tomorrow morning.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

Go-To-Hell Spirit.

Philadelphia.

The wild program of nonsense with which the Democrats are solemnizing the selection of a President reached a new peak of noisy hysteria last night when the local management injected into the political orgy a military pageant and beauty show which tangled with the convention traffic and threw the town into a stupendous jam. The added attraction was the annual Mummers' parade, a minor Mardi Gras, involving the fire department, the veterans' organizations, the militia, the Elks (white and colored) and a group of prize cuties selected for their beauty of face and form.

A great rush of the patriots from the convention hotels, augmenting the normal curbstone attendance, broke the police lines and cluttered Broad street, while the taxis—the principal transportation to and from the hall—were barred from the area.

It was one grand bust of noise and revelry, concluding with dancing in the streets and fighting in the saloons.

• • • •

For more than half a week the delegates and alternates have been weaving and swaying to the tune of "Anchors Aweigh," "Happy Days," "The Gang's All Here" and "Eliza Jane," stimulated by the sweet wind of many bands, the juice of the corn and an intense feeling for their jobs. Not one question has been put to them beyond the perfunctory motions to adjourn at the end of each round of foolishness and nobody is naive enough to expect any more serious strain on their statesmanship. It is the most spectacular display of cynicism, stupidity and the go-to-hell spirit of party bosses in the memory of the oldest grafter in town.

For all that the delegates have had to say, or will have to say, about the business of this convention the entire circus might have been dispensed with and the meeting of the minds held under Mr. Roosevelt's own hat. Not one of the demonstrations but could have been shut off in less than a minute without sacrifice of actual enthusiasm. The phony, muscular character of the prolonged, spontaneous ovation was never more apparent than in this gathering of the Democrats, and that is not to exclude the pathetic mooing of the Republicans at Cleveland the night they gave their little all for Herbert Hoover.

• • • •

A strange note in this convention is the metallic sound of the enthusiasm for Mr. Roosevelt as a party hero. They give him his noise with the cold note of so many Woolworth girls cheering Barbara Hutton at a company picnic. His spirit hovers o'er, to be sure, but it sheds discipline, not love. Perhaps they could get some fire into their stuff if there was a fight on.

The drinking increased, and two manufacturers of hangover medicine, with motives equally humane and practical, have caused the distribution of their remedies, free of charge, to each room in all the leading hotels. Cockeyed patriots babble and rock on their heels in all the bars, but the whole attendance might just as well be unconscious, as far as the fate of the country is concerned. There will be no calls on that which the orators, with roguish humor, have been heard to call their intelligence.

It would be careless to say that the convention has done no good. For besides circulating much spending money—largely derived from the public payrolls—it has provided an occasion for some spirited scratching and meowing among the social leaders of the party set in Washington. The good ladies of the fashionable salons have divided up into many little gangs and have been dumping one another out of preferred seats in the de luxe reservation, citing their husbands' ranks in the New Deal like army wives at a general's lawn party, and they will be throwing harpoons and hatchets with elegant grace for four long years. After that, like so many predecessors, they will get baggy and get forgot, but the present is a beautiful hour of strife.

• • • •

It is impossible in the present atmosphere and company to imagine that the sufferings of the poor, the worries of the farmer or the good of the U. S. A. has ever touched the heart of anyone concerned in the circus. They are fat with food, comfort and money and there is a shock, as of mocking at misfortune, in every rhetorical reference to the underprivileged. The hotels of Philadelphia at the moment are crowded with some of the most rapacious and brutal grafters and payroll parasites produced in this country since the Republicans gave us Warren Harding and the 40 thieves. In social conversation the poor, the disheartened and the underfed, who rank so high in the party publicity, are mentioned only in jest.

"Ah, Commissioner, and does your heart bleed for the unemployed today?" one asks, and the Commissioner, with his $12,500 a year, free of income tax, plus commissions on his business of bonding public contractors, replies:—"My heart bleeds freely for the poor today. Let us drown our sorrow in drink."

But it won't be long now. Everyone is bracing against one of the most appalling blasts of bum oratory in the history of the world in the nominating and seconding speeches. That ordeal over, the little politicians will pay for their petty jobs by voting as they are told and staggering through the aisles to exhaustion in one grand, 90-minute siege of spontaneity. Saturday Mr. Roosevelt will accept in person and then they will all go home—sore, sleepy, jumpy and shameless.

Admiral Standley Sojourns

Standley Urges Navy Insuring U.S. Security

Cites Personnel Methods; Sojourners to Close Convention Today.

Admiral William H. Standley, speaking at the sixteenth annual convention dinner of the National Sojourners at the Mayflower last night, urged maintenance of a navy that can furnish the country a positive guarantee of security.

Such a navy, he said, is worth whatever it may cost, but a navy that cannot furnish that guarantee is worthless.

Admiral Standley, who is chief of Naval Operations, asked for an adequate replacement program that would prevent the simultaneous obsolescence of a large number of Navy ships.

He stressed the personnel methods of the Navy, saying that the service was one of the best methods of training a man for citizenship. Only about one out of 20 applicants for enlistment is now being accepted, he said, because of the rigid standards observed.

The response to Admiral Standley's address was delivered by Col. Robert L. Queisser, sr., national president of the organization. The toastmaster alst night was Dr. William H. Sebrell, president of the Washington Chapter of the Sojourners. Maj. Edwin S. Bettleheim, jr., was master of ceremonies.

Speed Is Promised In Navy Spy Trial

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, June 26.—A brief, fast-moving trial for Harry Thomas Thompson, discharged Navy yeoman charged with selling United States naval secrets to a Japanese agent, was promised by Federal prosecutors after he pleaded innocent today.

Thompson was arraigned on a Federal grand jury indictment accusing him of selling secret Navy information to a Toshio Miyazaki, identified in the indictment as lieutenant commander of the imperial Japanese navy.

Miyazaki, a co-defendant, has not been apprehended.

The former yeoman's trial was set for Thursday and Clyde Thomas, deputy United States district attorney, said the case will be completed in two or three days.

Briton Stresses Need for Reich In Peace Plans

Londonderry Backs Nazis After Cooper Hints French Alliance.

By the Associated Press.

London, June 26.—The Earl of Londonderry, former cabinet minister and advocate of Anglo-German friendship, rushed to the Reich's defense today.

He acted in the wake of a Paris speech by Alfred Duff Cooper, the war secretary, which was widely interpreted as a call for a Franco-British alliance.

Londonderry declared:

"In my judgment, the peace of the world depends primarily on an understanding between France, Germany and Great Britain. We should work definitely with this object in view."

At the same time the Laborite members of Parliament, Ernest Thurtle and the Rev. R. Sorensen, followed Geoffrey Mander, opposition liberal, in putting down questions for answer in Commons as to whether Duff Cooper spoke for the government.

Other questions, it was expected, would be asked about Lord Londonderry's charges that Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, despite his disavowal, knew the rate and extent of German rearmament.

Baldwin, speaking at Leys School in Cambridge, said: "I shall not be here much longer. • • • many of us would be glad to ease off and hand over."

The Prime Minister has been accused in Commons and in the press of having lost his grip on the government.

Political quarters were keenly interested in Lord Londonderry's speech, and some suggested it might have been aimed at checking a possible drift away from Germany—the result of British disappointment with Adolf Hitler's failure to respond to the Locarno questionnaire concerning his intentions in Europe.

"I am sure the German nation is as anxious in its desire for peace as we, on that common ground," Londonderry said.

"We should receive in no niggardly or pedantic spirit the offers made to the world by Chancellor Hitler.

"Let us do all in our power to inspire confidence in all countries, especially at this moment in Germany and Italy.

"I mention these in particular because of the dangerous elements in Britain which in one case refuse to believe in the sincerity of Germany, and in the other desire to show their indignation toward Italy by continuing the policy of sanctions."

Retirement Act For Railroads Is Held Invalid

Justice Bailey Rules Taxing Illegal; Injunction Restrains Board.

The Administration's second railroad retirement law was declared unconstitutional here yesterday when Justice Jennings Bailey, of the United States District Court, held that the separate tax and pension provisions of the act of 1935 are "inseparable parts" of a single regulatory scheme which violates the due process provisions of the fifth amendment.

Justice Bailey issued an injunction which affects more than a million railway workers, and which restrains the Bureau of Internal Revenue from moving to collect taxes designed to raise $120,000,000 through a 3½ per cent tax on railway pay rolls and an equal levy on employes' wages. He also enjoined the Railroad Retirement Board from making any preparations for paying the pension which would have totaled $47,000,000 during the next fiscal year. First payments under the law were to have been made on July 1.

Immediately after the decision had been announced, Chairman Murray W. Latimer called a meeting of the retirement board, and it was announced that Justice Bailey's decision would be appealed to the District of Columbia Court of Appeals.

Alton Case Ruling Basis.

The lower court based its ruling on a 5-4 decision handed down last year by the United States Supreme Court in the Alton case declaring the 1934 railroad retirement act unconstitutional. That measure had sought to set up a similar retirement system under a single law including both pension and revenue provisions.

Congress enacted the law of 1935 with the court's decision in mind, and incorporated it in two measures—one setting up the pension system and the other providing taxes to support it.

Justice Bailey overlooked this, and said that the two acts "taken together so dovetail into one another as to create a complete system substantially the same as that created by the railroad retirement act of 1934."

"It is clear," he said, "that under the views of the Supreme Court in the Alton case the taxing act transcends the power of Congress.

"The provisions of the two acts in question are so interrelated and interdependent that each is a necessary part of one entire scheme," he declared. "This is not only apparent from the terms of the acts themselves, but is shown by their legislative history.

"I think that from what has been said it necessarily follows that the two acts are inseparable parts of a whole; that Congress would not have enacted one without the other, and to hold otherwise would be to shut my eyes to what all others can see and understand."

Balks Obtaining Records.

The injunction will prevent the retirement board from taking employe personnel records from the railroads, and officials said that it would be impossible to pay any pensions without these records, since the annuities are based primarily on length of service. Had the court sustained the act the following program would have become effective after July 1:

All railroad employes, aged 65 or older, would have retired on pension.

Employes with 30 years of service upon reaching the age of 50 could retire.

Employes with 30 years of service, and retired by a carrier because of mental or physical disability, would receive regular monthly pensions in proportion to their former earnings.

When the Supreme Court outlawed the original railroad retirement act of 1934, Chief Justice Hughes, in a dissenting opinion, said that the court apparently had closed the door to all types of compulsory railroad retirement legislation. He declared that the majority decision "denies to Congress the power to pass any compulsory pension act for railroad employes." His dissent was concurred in by Justices Stone, Brandeis and Cardozo; while Justices Van Devanter, McReynolds, Butler, Sutherland and Roberts formed the majority opinion.

Suit to enjoin operation of the law was brought by 131 first-class carriers, 289 associated enterprises and 16 intervening employes of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad. Justice Bailey heard the pleadings on March 23, and a number of railroad executives appeared in the case. Edward Buckland, chairman of the New York, New Haven & Hartford line pointed out that the railroad industry had failed to make a profit in 1935.

Feared Further Deficits.

F. E. Williamson, chairman of the New York Central; Hale Holden, chairman of the Southern Pacific; George B. Elliott, president of the Atlantic Coast Line, and L. A. Downs, president of the Illinois Central, were among those who testified that if the law were upheld, the railroads would be thrown further "into the red."

The Government introduced testimony showing that aging firemen were allowed to "double up" on a single job, with single pay, and evidence was offered showing that superannuated workers reduced the efficiency of the roads.

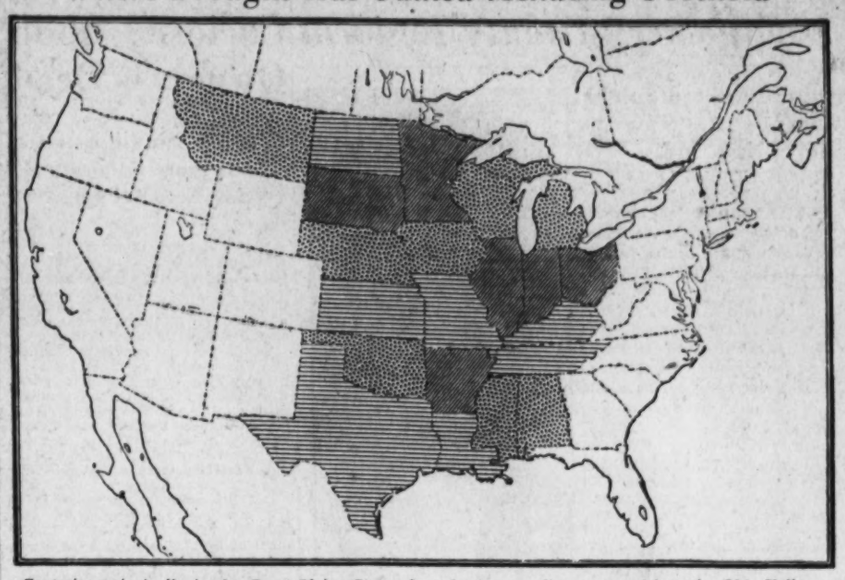
Justice Bailey has had the case under consideration since that time, and his decision has been eagerly awaited, both by the Government and by the affected railroads and employes.

Although the Government embraced the second railroad pension law and sought to defend it, its invalidation yesterday can scarcely be termed a blow against the Roosevelt Administration. After the law of 1934 had been declared unconstitutional and a new bill was introduced in Congress, Joseph B. Eastman, railroad co-ordinator, told the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee that "the need for this particular legislation has not been shown."

Administration forces were distinctly cool to the proposal, but outside pressure forced it through Congress — unanimously in the house and with only three dissenting votes in the Senate.

President Roosevelt set up a board to administer the law, composed of Chairman Latimer, James A. Dailey and Lee M. Eddy.

Where Drought Has Gained Menacing Foothold



Centering principally in the Great Plains States, but slowly spreading eastward into the Ohio Valley, a drought which is reaching disastrous proportions already has done vast damage to crops and pasturage. Horizontal lines denote States whose June rainfall up to 8 a. m. yesterday was 30 per cent of normal or less: North Dakota, Missouri, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee and Texas. Indicated by diagonal lines are States whose precipitation is 30 to 45 per cent of normal: Kansas, Minnesota, Arkansas, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio. States shown by dots have received 45 to 75 per cent of their rain quota this month: Montana, South Dakota, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan, Mississippi and Alabama.

Reich Will Send Arms to China, Japanese Hear

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, (Saturday), June 27.—The Domei (Japanese) News Agency, in a dispatch from Shanghai, today said a secret agreement was being negotiated by which German interests would supply arms, munitions and machinery to China.

The German products, the agency's dispatch said, would be worth 100,000,000 Chinese dollars (about $30,000,000). In exchange, it was stated, Germany would buy Chinese products.

The basic agreement, the Domei report stated, was signed in Berlin in the middle of May, and details are under negotiation now at Nanking.

The plan was signed in Berlin, Domei's account said, by a representative of the German ministry of defense; Hans Klein, manager of the Hapro firm at Hongkong; Cheng Tien-Fang, former Chinese ambassador at Berlin, and a special representative of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek, leader of the Chinese central government.

Tantamount to Loan.

The agreement, Domei said, was tantamount to a German loan to China as, although the German defense ministry and the Hapro firm agreed to deliver the arms, munitions and machinery in the near future, the Chinese goods will be delivered in from four to six years.

China, it was stated, will send Germany tungsten, paulownia oil (obtained from a Chinese tree), peanuts and other articles.

The Domei dispatch said authoritative sources declared the Japanese army had known of the deal for some time, and had not objected.

New Mongolian Rule.

Shanghai (Saturday), June 27.—A new military government under Japanese domination and completely independent of the Nanking Central China government has been set up in Inner Mongolia, it was announced officially today.

The seat of the new government was established at Chiapussu on the Chahar-Suiyan border. Prince Teh, pro-Japanese leader of Inner Mongolia, was named commander in chief of the new government's armed forces.

Civil War Reported.

Hongkong, Saturday, June 27 (AP). Civil war and mutiny reports added to the Chinese riddle tonight.

Fighting was reported on the Kiangsi-Kwangtung border by the official Kwangtung news agency as the forces of the Nanking (Central) government sought to check the southern government's announced intention to make war on Japan.

At the same time a semi-official report from Canton, seat of the southern government, said 7,000 Hunanese soldiers, attached to the Nanking government, had rebelled and announced themselves an anti-Japanese "Salvation" army.

Anti-Chinese demonstrations also were reported on the part of Japanese in Tsingtao, China, where residents demanded action against Chinese customs officials for alleged attacks on two Japanese freighters.

(In Tokyo the Domei (Japanese) news agency reported from Tientsin the Japanese destroyer Kiku was on its way to the Tientsin port of Tangku to remain until Japanese "satisfaction" is obtained from China in the smuggling crisis).

The Kwangtung News Agency also reported anti-Communist forces have been ordered southward from the provinces of Szechwan and Kweichow.

French Mother, Son Sentenced in Kidnaping

Aix-en-Proveince, France, June 26 (AP).—Mme. Marie Cardin and her son, Andre Clement, were sentenced to 20 years at hard labor today for kidnaping.

They were found guilty of abducting Claude Malmejac, the 18-month-old son of a physician, last December and were given the maximum sentence of 10 years for the crime. At the same time they were found guilty of attempting to kidnap another child and were given another 10 years for that.

Major Drought Feared extinct in many localities, mass shipment of livestock already is under way.

Rain Brings No Relief.

Light rains which fell in certain small sections of the Dakotas and Montana early yesterday brought no relief. With a hot sun emerging soon afterward, the precipitation evaporates before it can do vegetation any good.

Crop Weatherman Kincer, conservative though he is, readily admitted yesterday that the plight of farmers, stockmen and dairymen already is serious and is fast becoming acute. The following "growing season" figures he produced bear an ominous sign:

From April 1 to the present, North Dakota has had only 2.13 inches of rainfall, compared with 3.83 inches for the April-May-June period in 1934, when the Nation's worst drought on record was getting under way. Other States which show a similar deficiency for the three-month span are South Dakota, .19 inches less than in 1934; Minnesota, .85 inches; Montana, .90 inches; Missouri, 1.20 inches; Arkansas, 3.41 inches; Ohio, .71 inches; Kentucky, 1.55 inches, and Tennessee, 4.11 inches.

Kincer pointed out, however, as a compensating factor that the early summer of 1934 was exceptionally hot, whereas the Plains States this year were enjoying relatively cool weather until recent weeks.

Grim Summary Quoted.

He displayed the latest issue of the bureau's weekly weather and crop bulletin which, next to an actual visit to the stricken sections, probably presents the clearest picture of the havoc already wrought by deficient and poorly distributed rainfall, excessive heat and hot winds.

Following are a few excerpts from the grim summary, as of last Tuesday:

"With the continued absence of general rains there is now a widespread need for moisture in most agricultural sections of the country. Showers in recent weeks have been decidedly local and, while beneficial in the areas favored, the bulk of croplands have been missed and a good general rain is needed nearly everywhere between the Rocky and Appalachian Mountains. The deficiency in moisture for the present growing season is especially marked in the northern Great Plains"

States Hardest Hit.

Some of the hardest hit States:

"North Dakota—General rains needed in all sections . . . Pastures, ranges, meadows, oats, barley and winter rye continue to deteriorate . . . Many small grain fields being used for pasture . . . Considerable livestock shipped due to lack of feed.

"Minnesota—Considerable deterioration to growing crops . . . small grains almost complete failure . . . pastures deteriorating rapidly . . . rain badly needed.

"Nebraska—Warm, dry weather favorable for harvest, but damaged late grain considerably . . . not seriously suffering, but needs rain . . . pastures failing rapidly.

"Montana—Serious deterioration to crops and ranges parts of east account severe drought . . . dry land crops about gone and range short and dry or badly burned in southeast . . . irrigation crops mostly good, but water supply decreasing . . . livestock good, feed situation becoming critical and water running short in parts of east . . . heavy movement likely soon.

Oklahoma's Plight.

"Oklahoma—Week favorable for grain harvest, but unfavorable growing crops account heat, hot winds and no rain . . . rain needed entire State, urgently in east . . . progress of corn rather poor; condition poor to fair; damage by heat in much of east . . . pastures drying up . . . livestock good, but water scarce in some eastern counties.

"Missouri—No important rain . . . injurious heat several days . . . deterioration more or less general about half State . . . stock water almost exhausted some localities.

"Kansas—Too hot and dry for corn, though crop not seriously affected; winter wheat and other small grains in west and in late fields in east badly damaged; pastures and second crop of alfalfa, little growth.

"Wyoming—No rainfall, except for local showers in extreme southeast; range growth stopped; dry crops generally deteriorated; stock water situation serious in northeast; heavy livestock movement from State probable.

Corn Damage Negligible.

Although corn is in need of rain, damage to this crop to date is negligible, compared with spring wheat, said Kincer. July is the crucial month for corn, insofar as rainfall is concerned, he asserted. Spring wheat, which should be getting low temperatures and plenty of moisture at this stage, is withering and dying under the heat and dry spell.

Until a few weeks ago Alabama, Georgia, the Carolinas, Eastern Tennessee and Virginia were suffering crop damage as a result of the weather's caprice. Recent rains, however, have brought relief.

A keen student of climatology with many years of experience, Kincer does not attempt to conceal his bafflement as all indications point to another major drought. Until 1930, the United States Weather Bureau had acknowledged only two disastrous droughts of national importance—one in 1894 and the other in 1901. The 1930 catastrophe was followed by one even worse in 1934 and now, after a lapse of only two years, another widspread drought impends.

"Not a year passes," he said, "that there isn't a drought in some section of the country. But extensive droughts coming in such rapid succession are unusual. At least, they have been up to now."

The Western Plains suffer the most and oftenest from droughts because, with their normal precipitation just adequate to push up crops, even the slightest deficiency over a short period is enough to cause damage. The East, which gets three times as much rain as the West, can go rainless for weeks on end without harmful effect, while such a condition causes distress in Montana, for example, which averages only 15 inches of rainfall a year. Compare this with 48 inches for South Carolina, 44 for Rhode Island and 45 for New Jersey.

Pay Car, $2,284, And Driver Vanish

Pawtucket, R. I., June 25 (AP).—The driver of an armored pay roll truck and $2,284 of the $16,000 his vehicle contained vanished mysteriously here today.

The locked vehicle was found an hour later, a few blocks from the Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co., before which it had been halted while guards entered the bank.

Tonight despite hours of intensive investigation, in which opeatives from the United States Bureau of Investigation in Boston aided local and State authorities, Walter Husset, the driver, had not been found.

Morton Swift, one of the truck's two guards, estimated nearly a half an hour had elapsed before the loss of the truck became known.

With another guard he had entered the bank to collect pay rolls for delivery. When, emerging, they could not find the vehicle, they at first thought Husset had taken it to a garage to have its brakes adjusted.

The $16,000 in the truck had been picked up earlier in the day for deliveries to various factories in this section.

Long Is Recovering.

Rochester, Minn., June 26 (AP).—Breckinridge Long, United States Ambassador to Italy, convalescing following an operation, said today he planned to leave here probably next week for his summer home at Nantucket.

Loyal Knights of Washington Celebrate Tenth Anniversary

Dr. Everett M. Ellison, founder and first president of the Washington Loyal Knights of the Round Table, spoke yesterday at the club's celebration of its tenth anniversary. The event was a noon luncheon in the University Club.

Reviewing the history of the local unit of the international organization, Dr. Ellison pointed out that the club of 35 charter members had grown to one of more than 80. Eleven of those charter members were present yesterday and occupied places at the head table.

Dr. Ellison cited the efforts of Page McK. Etchison, Clarence Fleming and the late Homer J. Councilor, who helped him organize the Washington club.

Alton Grinnell, president of the club, introduced Dr. Ellison, who, in addition to holding office with the Washington Round Table, has served as international president.

The Loyal Knights of the Round Table is a civic-service organization with chapters in the United States, Canada and England.

Drink-Crazed Man, Now Dead, Named Slayer

By the Associated Press.

Chattanooga, Tenn., June 26.—The hunt for the murderer of attractive Mrs. Eula Mae McConnell, mother of twin baby girls, ended today at the grave of a delirium tremens victim.

Sheriff Frank Burns named James Jonas, 53-year-old painter, who died in a delirium produced by drink, as the killer of the 23-year-old housewife.

Mrs. McConnell died May 1, a day after she was savagely beaten in her apartment in a fashionable residential section.

The sheriff said the crazed Jonas died strapped to a hospital cot a week after the crime.

The solution resulted largely from statements of two women acquaintances of Jonas, Burns said.

Confessed Crime.

One of them, Mrs. Bertha Clayton, said the painter confessed the crime to her and said he was "going to hell" for it, but that she had kept the secret through fear.

The other, Mrs. C. L. Rose, told of seeing Jonas near the McConnell home the afternoon of the attack, but at the time attributed his nervous condition to drunkenness.

As Jonas lay unconscious on his death bed, County Detective Roy Clinton said he murmured, "That poor little woman—I'm sorry she's dead."

Mrs. Clayton told officers that on the afternoon of the attack she was waiting at the Jonas home to ask him for some money he owed her. She related that he returned drunk and "looking like a wild man."

"There was blood coming down the right side of his face from a long scratch," she added.

Handed Her a Purse.

"When I started to leave," she continued, "he called me back and handed me a ladies' purse. It had blood on it, too. I asked him if he had been in a fight. All he would say was, 'that poor little woman. I didn't mean to do it. I hope she don't die.'"

She said Jonas then told her to take the purse, which had been stolen from the McConnell home, and "put it in some automobile—then no one will know who did it."

"I was afraid to tell an officer," Mrs. Clayton explained. "The way he looked at me I knew he would kill me." So she told of dropping the purse in the rear of an automobile, where it was found later in a second-hand automobile place.

Civic Campaign Exceeds Fund Goal of $50,000

Capital Committee Reports a 20% Increase in the Number of Donors.

The Greater National Capital Committee's campaign for funds this year has exceeded its original goal of $50,000 by several thousand dollars, Frederick P. Siddons, chairman of the drive, announeed yesterday at a regular meeting of the executive commttee n the Wllard Hotel.

"The ncreased amount subscrbed this year is not the only important feature of the campaign," said Siddons, "for it is encouraging to know that the number of subscribers this year is more than 20 per cent greater than the number last year."

Funds subscribed in the campaign just ended are to finance operations of the Greater National Capital Committee during the fiscal year 1936-37.

Indian Accompanied Group to Summer Camp at River Bend, Va.

The Indian was taken to the hospital three weeks ago.

His body will be sent back to South Dakota for burial.

After Custer's massacre, when his tribe surrendered, Flies Above joined an Indian guerilla party and for two years continued to wage war against United States soldiers. Finally, when the rebellious band surrendered, he was appointed a captain in a Government reservation.

Flies Above accompanied Buffalo Bill Cody to Europe on a tour.

Workers Assaulted In Camden Strike

Camden, N. J., June 26 (U.P.).—Disorder broke out in various sections of Camden late today as strikers at the RCA Manufacturing Co. plant carried their battle against workers into business and residential districts.

Four men were injured, 23 arrested and 3 women were disrobed in section battles. The women, whose names were not divulged, were seized by strikers at one of the main intersections of the business district and disrobed completely before police arrived.

Two of the injured men were Thomas Fay, 23, of Westmont, N. J., who suffered a broken jaw, and Major Graham, 26, Camden. Graham was beaten severely on the head and physicians said he may lose his right eye.

The incidents spread into the residential sections after workers were escorted to their homes in police cars.

Nathan Sickle, Curiosity Shop Owner, Is Dead

Nathan Sickle, whose little novelty and tobacco shop at 1011 D street northwest delighted the hearts and fancies of three generations of children and adults, is dead, a martyr, his friends say, to the encroachments of the machine age.

The 74-year-old merchant of odds and ends—ranging from pewter dancing girls to ancient book ends fashioned as clipper ships, died Friday in George Washington Hospital, where he had lain for several weeks. Physicians said he died of complications resulting from injuries suffered in an automobile accident six months ago.

But his associates, remembering the kindly old gentleman for his industry, pointed to a faded "Closing Out Sale" sign that hung over the rickety doorway of the shop, which had been barred for the past two months.

Gazed at Crowds.

Sickle had no place to work, they said. His active hands no longer could fumble among his stock. Days were blank spaces he could not fill in.

Without his business contacts, Sickle retired to his room at 607 Sixth street northwest and looked daily from his window at the crowds in the streets. Presently he went to the hospital, heart-broken and ill.

Sickle learned his business from his father in the same little shop officials condemned two months ago to make way for a modern building.

During the War Between the States the elder Sickle sold tobacco to the blue-coated soldiers who came to Washington on leave or duty.

In 1864 Gen. Grant himself stopped for a packet of cigars. Sickle never forgot that. There were other mighty smokers in the era before the cigarette—smokers of stogies and pipes, and chewers of plug. In that distant day Sickle's was the leading tobacco shop in Washington.

Cigars Hand-Rolled.

The garish saloons of the post-war decades bought large quantities of cigars wholesale there. The cigars were hand-rolled by Sickle's employes from the finest Virginia leaf.

When the United States entered the World War, and tobacco supplies became scarce, Sickle concentrated more and more on the novelties his father had kept in stock. He sold regimental emblems, flags, service buttons and war souvenirs, such as battered helmets, from France.

In recent years his shelves had become piled with stock. Two upper floors were filled with the curiosities of many places and years and histories, and over some of them spiders had spun their webs. Bits of this stock still remained in Sickle's shop yesterday.

A bachelor, Sickle leaves two sisters and a nephew in New York. Funeral services will be tomorrow at 10 a. m., at Danzansky's chapel, followed by burial in Washington Hebrew Cemetery.

On the Air Today

Some of your Saturday night air features may be missing tonight but no less a personage than Franklin D. Roosevelt takes over a virtual monopoly of the country's air facilities between the hours of 8 and 10. In some instances the networks have juggled their regular features in order that they may be heard at later hours.

For example, the veteran "National Barn Dance" comes on at 10, at WMAL, immediately following the big broadcast from Philadelphia. Similarly, WJSV's "Professor Quiz" takes a 10 o'clock spot.

The President's acceptance speech tonight lifts the week's political programs from the Democratic convention from a rather low level of entertainment. And so many listeners have said, "the proceedings have been so cut and dried that it hasn't been as good entertainment as the Republicans gave us." On the other hand, political foe and friend alike will have an ear to his speaker tonight to learn what the President has to say.

Many of us are wondering what will happen after tonight. Without checking the networks as to political programs already scheduled, I rather imagine that the air will be filled more and more as the weeks pass with appeals to the public from both major camps and the lesser "third parties" as well.

* * * *

Are you following the "Hit Parade's" roll call of popular tunes these days? You may be interested, in case you miss the air show, in knowing that "Is It True What They Say About Dixie?" leads the field for another week. WJSV will present the hour of best sellers tonight at 7. "Robins and Roses" remains in second position; "She Shall Have Music" is third, and replaced "All My Life" for that choice. Other tunes in order are "It's a Sin to Tell a Lie," "Would You?" "Glory of Love," "You," "These Foolish Things Remind Me of You" and "Take My Heart."

* * * *

"Curbstone Queries" has not left the air permanently. Due to Democratic convention meetings convening at 12 noon, Washington time, The Washington Post's Monday through Friday feature has been blocked off the WMAL program schedule for the last few days. Almost a full week, in fact. However, Monday will find The Post's sidewalk interviewers back at the old stand as usual.

* * * *

Art Brown, Gordon Hittenmark and Arthur Godfrey will contribute to this space in the next three days while I make a brief excursion to the deep South. Each of these Washington favorites have agreed to do a "colyum." The first will appear Monday. J. H. H.

Workers Assaulted In Camden Strike

Camden, N. J., June 26 (U.P.).—Disorder broke out in various sections of Camden late today as strikers at the RCA Manufacturing Co. plant carried their battle against workers into business and residential districts.

Four men were injured, 23 arrested and 3 women were disrobed in section battles. The women, whose names were not divulged, were seized by strikers at one of the main intersections of the business district and disrobed completely before police arrived.

Two of the injured men were Thomas Fay, 23, of Westmont, N. J., who suffered a broken jaw, and Major Graham, 26, Camden. Graham was beaten severely on the head and physicians said he may lose his right eye.

The incidents spread into the residential sections after workers were escorted to their homes in police cars.

Nathan Sickle, Curiosity Shop Owner, Is Dead

Nathan Sickle, whose little novelty and tobacco shop at 1011 D street northwest delighted the hearts and fancies of three generations of children and adults, is dead, a martyr, his friends say, to the encroachments of the machine age.

The 74-year-old merchant of odds and ends—ranging from pewter dancing girls to ancient book ends fashioned as clipper ships, died Friday in George Washington Hospital, where he had lain for several weeks. Physicians said he died of complications resulting from injuries suffered in an automobile accident six months ago.

But his associates, remembering the kindly old gentleman for his industry, pointed to a faded "Closing Out Sale" sign that hung over the rickety doorway of the shop, which had been barred for the past two months.

Gazed at Crowds.

Sickle had no place to work, they said. His active hands no longer could fumble among his stock. Days were blank spaces he could not fill in.

Without his business contacts, Sickle retired to his room at 607 Sixth street northwest and looked daily from his window at the crowds in the streets. Presently he went to the hospital, heart-broken and ill.

Sickle learned his business from his father in the same little shop officials condemned two months ago to make way for a modern building.

During the War Between the States the elder Sickle sold tobacco to the blue-coated soldiers who came to Washington on leave or duty.

In 1864 Gen. Grant himself stopped for a packet of cigars. Sickle never forgot that. There were other mighty smokers in the era before the cigarette—smokers of stogies and pipes, and chewers of plug. In that distant day Sickle's was the leading tobacco shop in Washington.

Cigars Hand-Rolled.

The garish saloons of the post-war decades bought large quantities of cigars wholesale there. The cigars were hand-rolled by Sickle's employes from the finest Virginia leaf.

When the United States entered the World War, and tobacco supplies became scarce, Sickle concentrated more and more on the novelties his father had kept in stock. He sold regimental emblems, flags, service buttons and war souvenirs, such as battered helmets, from France.

In recent years his shelves had become piled with stock. Two upper floors were filled with the curiosities of many places and years and histories, and over some of them spiders had spun their webs. Bits of this stock still remained in Sickle's shop yesterday.

A bachelor, Sickle leaves two sisters and a nephew in New York. Funeral services will be tomorrow at 10 a. m., at Danzansky's chapel, followed by burial in Washington Hebrew Cemetery.

On the Air Today

Some of your Saturday night air features may be missing tonight but no less a personage than Franklin D. Roosevelt takes over a virtual monopoly of the country's air facilities between the hours of 8 and 10. In some instances the networks have juggled their regular features in order that they may be heard at later hours.

For example, the veteran "National Barn Dance" comes on at 10, at WMAL, immediately following the big broadcast from Philadelphia. Similarly, WJSV's "Professor Quiz" takes a 10 o'clock spot.

The President's acceptance speech tonight lifts the week's political programs from the Democratic convention from a rather low level of entertainment. And so many listeners have said, "the proceedings have been so cut and dried that it hasn't been as good entertainment as the Republicans gave us." On the other hand, political foe and friend alike will have an ear to his speaker tonight to learn what the President has to say.

Many of us are wondering what will happen after tonight. Without checking the networks as to political programs already scheduled, I rather imagine that the air will be filled more and more as the weeks pass with appeals to the public from both major camps and the lesser "third parties" as well.

* * * *

Are you following the "Hit Parade's" roll call of popular tunes these days? You may be interested, in case you miss the air show, in knowing that "Is It True What They Say About Dixie?" leads the field for another week. WJSV will present the hour of best sellers tonight at 7. "Robins and Roses" remains in second position; "She Shall Have Music" is third, and replaced "All My Life" for that choice. Other tunes in order are "It's a Sin to Tell a Lie," "Would You?" "Glory of Love," "You," "These Foolish Things Remind Me of You" and "Take My Heart."

* * * *

"Curbstone Queries" has not left the air permanently. Due to Democratic convention meetings convening at 12 noon, Washington time, The Washington Post's Monday through Friday feature has been blocked off the WMAL program schedule for the last few days. Almost a full week, in fact. However, Monday will find The Post's sidewalk interviewers back at the old stand as usual.

* * * *

Art Brown, Gordon Hittenmark and Arthur Godfrey will contribute to this space in the next three days while I make a brief excursion to the deep South. Each of these Washington favorites have agreed to do a "colyum." The first will appear Monday. J. H. H.

Former School Mate Is Visiting Mrs. Packer

Miss Hazel Wolhaupter Is on Way to England for Research.

Mrs. Earl L. Packer, wife of the Assistant Chief of the Division of Eastern European Affairs, has as her guest Miss Hazel Wolhaupter, of San Mateo, Calif., who is here on her way to Cambridge, England, for the summer.

Mrs. Packer and Miss Wolhaupter were in school together at the University of California. Miss Wolhaupter will do research work in the literature of the Elizabethan period during her stay in Cambridge. She arrived here yesterday by plane and will remain until July 10, when she will go to New York to sail the following day aboard the Champlain for England.

Mrs. Packer's brother, Mr. Louis Malone, noted young pianist, who is remaining in Washington for the summer, is providing the musical setting for the old-fashioned melodramas at the Roadside Theater, improvising appropriate music as the action of the productions progresses. The summer season will continue until September.

Cranes Bring Turkish Girl Of 11 to U. S.

Lazita Jacovites in Love With Everything American.

Attache and Wife Return From Istanbul to Fort Myer.

Col. and Mrs. J. A. Crane, who have just returned to Fort Myer from Istanbul, Turkey, and whose son, Mr. Alden McKim Crane, has just married there an Egyptian princess, Enineh Ruklye Hailm, have also a little Turkish gift as a member of their household. Three years ago Mrs. Crane became interested in the child, Lazita Jacovites, whom she took into their home and whom she has brought to America to be educated.

Lazita, now 11 years old, loves America and everythnig American. She arrived in Fort Myer early this week with Col. and Mrs. Crane and their daughter, Miss Mary McKim Crane. "I love it here; I love everything about it," she told Mrs. Crane when they reached Fort Myer.

This is her second trip to America, as she came here for a visit of six weeks with Mrs. Crane a year and a half ago. She is looking forward to entering American schools in the fall and eventually to taking a business course which will fit her to become an American businesswoman.

Mrs. Crane was first attracted to the child because of her alertness and charm. Her mother was willing for Col. and Mrs. Crane to bring her to America because of the opportunity Lazita would have. She attended a Greek school in Istanbul during the three years she had been with them in that city and speaks Turkish, English, French and Greek fluently. She learns quickly, has keen power of observation and an enthusiastic appreciation of new things and places. She has already learned to enjoy American movies and last night attended one.

Col. and Mrs. Crane at present are "camping" in their quarters at Fort Myer, awaiting the arrival of their furniture, which will not be here until next week. Mrs. Crane has brought from Turkey several Persian and Turkish rugs which she prizes and some interesting old silver, a silver mirror which came from one of the palaces and some old silver boxes in which the Turkish ladies used to keep their sweetmeats.

Miss Crane attended a French school for two years in Istanbul and for the past year and a half has attended the American College for Women there.

Col. Crane and his family made their home in Washington when he was stationed here from 1923 to 1928. Mrs. Crane is a native of Baltimore, the daughter of Mr. S. S. McKim, who still resides there.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Man Suggests Probable Reasons Why So Many Young Women Are Lonely in Washington.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Once in a while you publish letters from lonely young ladies, and you usually advise them to join some church organization, and some of them say they do go to church. The truth is that there are not many matrimonially eligible men to be found in church, but it is also true there are not many eligible young women to be found there, either.

* * * *

I happen to be one of the eligible men, and have been doing active church work for years. I have seen many young women come and go during that time, young women that any man might have fallen in love with if given the opportunity. But let me suggest to your lonely young ladies one thing that might be wrong with them: Maybe they don't stick to one congregation long enough to meet, attract, or get acquainted with the members. No person can go to one church a couple of times and then go on to another church for a few visits and expect to have somebody fall in love with him. Love at first sight is very unusual, and any person without devoted friends might as well make up his mind that he is not sufficiently attractive to compel another's love at first sight.

* * * *

I believe the most desirable persons to marry are those who go to church. A desirable person is necessarily a morally good person. However, such persons are slow in mating because they look over their prospects carefully and the men are careful not to make improper advances I advise all lonely women (and lonely men, too) to study the various religious denominations and choose the one best suited to his social and spiritual needs; then attend that church and work hard and willingly in its service; get acquainted with all the members possible, and be as interested in the work to be done as in meeting persons of the opposite sex. If a person follows this program and at the end of the year finds himself without a number of pleasant friends, it is because his own looks and personality are at fault.

* * * *

To return to the subject of lonely girls: some girls are nice looking but as soon as they start talking the man who is listening feels like running away. Such girls would profit by lessons in elocution. One cannot help his physical appearance, but anyone can develop a pleasing personality. The girl whose mind is filled with pleasant thoughts is apt to register a much more pleasing expression than one who thinks it necessary to stretch her face into a smirk, a smile or a grin in order to suggest that she has a sweet disposition. If a woman should happen to be so homely that no man would look at her twice, despite her having a sweet disposition, she might just as well begin at once to learn how to enjoy life without a man in it.

Another suggestion which girls might profit by is this: Don't be afraid to show your natural feelings occasionally. Some girls adopt such an aloof attitude toward men in general that any man would be hesitant to show his interest in them. I know what I am talking about because I am so homely that girls never give me a second glance or a second thought, although so far as character, intelligence and worldly success are concerned I stack up pretty well with any man. Yet in spite of my lack of girl friends I get real enjoyment out of life. And I feel very kindly toward these morally good, lonely young ladies who write your column asking how to make friends with men. As for the drinkers and smokers, however, they can die of lonesomeness for all I care.

HONEST ADVISER.

DEAR HONEST ADVISER: It is most kind of you to interest yourself in the plight of Washington's lonely young women, and deliver yourself of these common sense suggestions on their behalf. As you say, there is little profit in being a drifter from church to church. I suppose that is only another way of saying "the rolling stone gathers no moss" in the way of well-established and satisfying friendships. I agree with you that many girls fail to appreciate the social importance of a cultivated voice; and that still others alienate acquaintances by adopting a forbidding air of austere self containment. I am sure our women readers will be interested in what you have to say if for no other reason than that it represents a man's opinion. M. H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Do you think you could appeal through your column for employment for me, withholding my name and address? I am a widow by divorce, with two sons (the eldest nearly 14) to support. I am an ex-teacher from Maryland, with five years' teaching experience, and am a graduate psychiatric nurse of St. Elizabeth's Hospital. Due to a serious injury to my back I cannot pass a physical examination for that service any longer. I have done general office work, some typing and clerical work in a store. I am 35 years old . . . I have spent money we badly need for food chasing around answering advertisements, but have failed to annex a job by such means. I will appreciate your advice or help. Thank you sincerely. ALICE O. D.

DEAR ALICE O. D.: Time and again it has been pointed out here that this column is not to be regarded as a job-finding agency. However, your letter (which has been briefly condensed above) seems to have been written out of such real distress of mind that I feel justified in making one more exception to this general rule. Perhaps some of our readers may be in a position to help you. Your name and address will be given to any helpfully inclined inquirers. M. H.

Marriage Delay Called Menace To Happiness

Survey Reveals Pastors Advise the Bride to Quit Job.

THE POSTPONED marriage is an even greater menace to society than the working wife, according to a recent survey conducted by the Northwestern Life Insurance Co. regarding observations of 166 pastors in 160 American cities.

Seventy-six of those consulted advised early marriage even though the bride must help to support the home by working outside of it. Another 37, who also object to postponed marriages, qualified their answers by stipulating that the bride's employment should not be continued for more than a year after marriage, or by advising against postponement if the girl is over 26 or if the engagement has continued longer than 18 months.

Two out of every three pastors contributing to the survey feel that married happiness and stability are doubtful if the wife works for a number of years. Typical comments in this connection were: "The man's self-respect inevitably suffers"; "children must live like orphans"; "the arrival of a baby boosts expenses and stops the wife's earnings, abruptly lowering living standards and putting a heavy strain on marital ties;" "the only exception is where the wife's employment is strictly temporary."

Velvet Hats That Ventilate

Smart, Air-Cooled Midsummer Hats Accompanying Chiffon Outdoor Frocks

Not to be outdone by all of this air-conditioning in frocks and suits, the newest hats for midsummer (with a bit of fall in their fashioning) are appearing in "open air" versions. Shiny black chiffon velvet forms the basis for these clever little hats, with wide-mesh net as the perfect summer complement, in their styling. Beret and Breton-like brims, if one can really call them brims, are made of the velvet with net used in lieu of crowns, and forming the smart visor veils.

The "open air" hats, as the name implies, were created to accompany the chiffon dinner and cocktail frocks, which smart women are wearing this summer for out-of-door dining. They are not only the ideal affinity for such apparel but, being definitely new and exceedingly chic, add a touch of glamour to a frock which, perhaps is beginning to look a bit jaded.

As an acquisition to the travel wardrobe, they are grand and will be correct in any gathering of smartly-dressed women, and pack very easily in the corner of the traveling bag.

The hats illustrated sell for $3.95. Information as to where they may be purchased can be secured by calling The Post Fashion Editor, National 4200, Extension 323.

And Call It Accident

By Mrs. Belloc Lowndes

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN.

PHILIP TREFANE, when first taking his paying guest round the inhabited portion of the castle, had actually laughed as he had pushed aside the rug and revealed the trap door. But Ruth had inwardly shuddered then, and inwardly she shuddered now, telling herself that never could she feel really happily at peace in this now quaint and delightful room. Always would she feel as if there still echoed through the salt-laden air the cries and groans of some poor wretch awaiting death in that fearsone oubliette below.

Suddenly she told herself she might as well go and look at the annex which was soon to be, in a special sense, her own dwelling place. So she stepped out of the French window onto a narrow terrace which was the least attractive feature of Perranuth Castle, and whose stone balustrade perilously overhung the rocks which rose jaggedly from the shore.

Turning to her left, she soon reached the end of the terrace, where a stout oak door swung loosely on its hinges. Pushing the door open, she saw before her a steep grass incline in which had been hewn out rough steps leading down to the shore.

Standing still for a moment, she looked about her with a surprise that deepened into a feeling of recoil and dislike for to her left stood a singular and unattractive-looking building which she knew must be what the Trefanes called the "annex."

It consisted of two high stories, and looked shoddy and shabby, for though the wood of which it was built had been painted dark green, the paint had not been renewed and the boards appeared not only weatherbeaten, but dirty, too.

The lower portion of the annex, that which had apparently been used as a studio, might have been a conservatory, for the side looking seaward formed one long window. The high upper story had four narrow windows which evidently afforded light to two rooms.

There came over Ruth Starling a sudden, inexplicable feeling of shrinking fear, coupled with a dislike of the place. She thought of her stately, stone-walled cool bedroom and the comfortable four-post bed in which she had slept so soundly the last few nights. It seemed a crazy scheme to leave her room in the castle to sleep in suche a place as that she was now gazing at with a sensation of slight disgust.

Stepping carefully, Ruth made her way down the grass steps, and when she found herself on a kind of pebble-strewn, concrete platform standing just above the beach, she gazed from quite another angle at the curious wooden building.

And then she gave a stifled cry, for a face had suddenly appeared behind one of the panes of the long window. It was a pale, queer-looking countenance, and for a fleeting instant she wondered if it was that of the wraith of the eccentric artist who had built the annex. Then all at once she realized the pale face must be that of Helen Bates, and she remembered that it was in the annex Capt. Trefane's stepdaughter spent much of her time.

Ruth Meets Helen.

The face at the window vanished, and soon there came the sound of a door opening on the further side of the building, and a lumpy-looking girl, who looked about 14, came hurrying toward her. As she came up she breathlessly exclaimed: "Why, Miss Starling, it's considered awfully dangerous to come down by those grass steps! A man broke his ankle there last year. Do be careful, or you'll have another accident!"

"Another accident? What d'you mean?"

"I mean when you were nearly drowned yesterday."

Ruth remembered the insistent way Iris had begged her not to mention her terrifying adventure, so she said, lightly:

"What you heard is a great exaggeration, as Mark Twain said when he heard a report of his death." Then she asked: "But what other way down from the castle is there?"

"There are some proper stones steps leading down to the shore at the back of the annex. You go through into Lady Cicester's flower garden. That's the way I come down here, always."

They were now face to face, and Ruth noticed with a mixture of pity and disgust that the girl was unkempt, untidy and had an unpleasant, defiant expression. She had a pale, unhealthy-looking face, only redeemed by beautiful dark eyes, and a mop of chestnut hair.

"That lower room is called the studio, isn't it?"

"Yes, it is; but who told you that?"

"Capt. Trefane told me. He also said that the studio had been your nursery."

Dressed as Child.

Ruth was not going to be downed by this rude, ill-mannered little girl.

Then with a shock she realized that Helen was not "little" any longer. Helen was almost as tall as herself, though she was still dressed, and in very unbecoming garments, more or less as a child.

"May I come into the annex?" she asked. "I want to see the two upper rooms. Your stepfather is kindly going to have a bathroom made out of one of them, and then I'm to sleep in the other."

She saw a look of sullen anger rise into Helen's face, and she added quickly, "I sha'n't be using the studio, of course, for I shall go into the castle as soon as I'm up and dressed."

Helen turned and silently led the way around to the side door. It opened into an ugly little hall containing one chair.

"You'd best wait here, while I see whether the rooms upstairs are unlocked. They were always kept locked three years ago."

An Unpleasant Discovery.

The girl ran up the narrow staircase, and Ruth pushed open the half-open door into what had evidently been the living room of the man who had built the place. To her surprise it still looked like a studio, for there were canvases leaning against the wall, and a drawing board to which was pinned a large piece of paper covered with pencil drawings stood on an easel.

She walked forward to see the drawings, and surprise deepened into amazement when she saw that the drawings were clever, unpleasant caricatures of men and women known to her!

There was one of the old marchioness holding up her stick in the air, as if she were about to throw it at some one; a cruel drawing exaggerated the defects in Lord John's remarkably ugly, misshapen face, and a frightful head, strangely like a Medusa, recalled, unmistakably, that of Iris Trefane. And that was not all!

In a corner of the large sheet was a caricature of herself, Ruth Starling. It was the only drawing there where the whole figure was given, and as she stood staring at it she had to acknowledge that it was a brilliant drawing done, too, with a few bold strokes. From the mouth—her mouth—there issued a streamer on which was written, "I am an actress!" Poor Ruth. She was so amazed and yes, so hurt, that tears rose to her eyes. Where and when had Helen Bates seen her to make so close and cruel a study? It could have been no fleeting glance which had made possible that odious drawing. The caricaturist must have spied on her from some secret, hidden point of vantage.

There came a slight sound, and she turned around to face the now alarmed-looking girl.

Saintly Type Model Scarce, Artist Finds

Sculptress of Religious Subjects Says Women of Today Lack Serenity.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

FEMININE MODELS are scarce for the artist whose forte is ecclesiastical figures, according to Mrs. Stone-Hastings, whose sculptures of saints, signed "E. Stone," have won acclaim both here and abroad.

"You have no idea how difficult it is to find a woman with a serene, sweet expression so characteristic of portraits by the old masters," she said yesterday. "Americans are too self-conscious; Europeans too self-contained. The average modern woman's face is neither tranquil nor spiritual.

Yet somewhere, somehow, Mrs. Stone-Hastings has caught the expression she wants in her portraits, for her two life-size statues of St. Anne and the Blessed Virgin, which will be placed in the Lady Chapel of St. Matthews Church on Monday, have just the faces you would expect. Photographs of other statues she has executed likewise indicate that, even in the whirl of modern life, some women have retained the Madonna-like look.

Uses Composite Models.

"But most of my statues are made from composite models," Mrs. Stone-Mastings explained. "I got the eyes from one woman, the mouth from another, and probably the nose from another."

Most of her inspiration comes "from the faces of workingwomen," she said. "My best models have been women who rub shoulders with life in its harder phases; women who have suffered, who have lived long enough to know that peace comes only after struggle, that what cannot be cured must be endured."

Early in the morning she frequently leaves her studio in the artists' quarter on Paris' famous Left Bank to go to the market looking for models. "If I glimpse a woman whose eyes, or nose or brow appeals to me, I track her down and ask her to pose. Later, I find another who has some feature that can be worked into the portrait. That is how I finally get the face I have in mind."

Though she does not confine her sculpture exclusively to ecclesiastical figures, Mrs. Stone-Hastings admits they are her favorite medium of expression. A devout Catholic (though her father was a Protestant missionary), she considers this work as something of a religious service. Discussing this yesterday at St. Matthews' Book Stall at 1754 M street, where some of her statuettes now are on display, she revealed that at one time she decided to be a nun; was, in fact, a novitiate when she fell ill of a fever. Later, she changed her plans and made up her mind to devote herself to sculptures of the saints.

Career Is Inspiring.

Her career might inspire many mothers who, after their children are reared, look about for something to occupy their time. Her four daughters and her son were grown when she became a full-fledged sculptor. "When my children were small, I got some practice in modeling them," she said, "but I always tore up the work when it was finished, because I never had time to work out the details to suit me."

But in her Paris studio her time is now her own. "Often, under the fire of inspiration I work all night," she continued. "Sometimes, when I think my eyesight is failing, I look up to discover that the dawn is sifting through my window."

While in Washington, Mrs. Stone-Hastings has been visiting her son, Jean Wells Hasting, an architect. When she leaves this country July 1 on the liner Roma, she will go to Carrara, Italy, to live in a peasant's home while she works on a life-size statue of the Lady of the Immaculate Conception. Later, she will return to her studio in Paris, "where I enjoy working more than anywhere else in the world."

Things That Make Women More Beautiful

Posed by Gail Sheridan.

By Mignon.

(The Mignon who writes this column does not sell, indorse or manufacture cosmetics.)

IF YOU LIKE the scent of gardenias—most women do—you will be interested in a new perfume toilet water brought out by one of the old manufacturers whose fragrances are invariably true.

It is called a flower infusion, the scent being gardenia, and this is a real gardenia, not something that the manufacturer intended to make smell like gardenia, but couldn't quite accomplish his desire. It is strong enough to use as a perfume, a few drops in the bath would perfume a tubful of water delightfully, and as an after-bath rub it has everything to recommend it. No matter how much you use, it is not too sweet.

The bottle is an ornament for the dressing table of the most fastidious woman. The nice thing about this perfume is that you feel you get so much for your money when you take it home, and after you get there you find that you made no mistake.

Great Patience Needed in Cure Of Stuttering

Treatment Is Difficult, But Not Impossible, Says Dr. Cutter.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

History records the names of many distinguished men and women who were afflicted with stuttering and the condition is fairly common today.

Those who have had considerable experience with stutterers feel that as a group they exhibit a certain sense of isolation. As a result, some will become introspective and may reflect a mild type of ostracism.

Emotion is a fundamental possession of each of us and in the stutterer the desire to do is ahead of the power of accomplishment. Every one is conscious of three emotional states—(1) exaltation, (2) the normal condition in which one carries on routine affairs, (3) depression (fear, anxiety, a sense of failure). Most of us are in all three moods every day, but we can avoid group three by training and the exercise of will power.

Treatment is difficult and requires great patience and persistent training. There is no one "best" method that will apply to all. At the outset the child should receive a thorough physical examination—which includes the nervous system—to make certain that no organic disease is present, following which instruction in the rules of good hygiene—diet, sleep, outdoor exercise, etc.—should be given.

The behavior of the youngster must then be studied with the full co-operation of the parents and every possible cause of emotional upset removed. There are many recorded cases in which the condition was wholly relieved when bullying or nagging on the part of an older brother or sister ceased. No help can be offered unless the confidence of the victim is first secured so that he will disclose every inhibition. An understanding physician in the category of a teacher is highly desirable. This realignment of emotions may require several weeks. The patient must recover his courage.

Relaxation is the next hurdle. This will take practice and must include every muscle of the body, particularly those of the abdomen, the chest, and the throat. The power of suggestion may be utilized, but should not be attempted until after all underlying emotional conflicts have been relieved. Then may follow any one of several methods involving slow speech, reading aloud, practice in repeating syllables, etc.

Husband's Role In Social Life Often Problem

How Much Time to Give From His Business to Society Debatable.

By Margaret Wallace.

THE part the husband and father must play in the social life of the family presents a constant problem in many Washington households.

There is never any question about the head of the house sitting at the head of the table at formal and informal dinners. How far his social must give way to his business and official duties and allow him to be at home, when his wife or other members of his family entertain at tea or other daytime functions is often a matter of family controversy.

One hostess has solved this problem by not demanding her husband's presence, when she is entertaining for women. At a tea or party in the spacious garden of their home to which both men and women are invited she expects her husband to be present. She insists that she would not leave him alone to entertain a group of women or men and women. She never invites both men and women unless she asks her husband if the day and hour will be convenient to him. If he is detained by business or the unexpected situations that come in a busy man's life she expects him to be present at least some of the time the party is in progress.

Good Manners, Always.

Next to the duties of the man of the family as host a high standard of good manners between husband and wife is important in the social scheme of our homes and community. The sons of the family get their ideas of good manners from their father in the home. The well-bred husband always greets his wife and other members of the family courteously in the morning and when he returns at night. At the dinner table the father or one of the sons, at the request of the father, seats the wife and mother at the table as politely as in a public cafe. The wife and mother is always served first, when the man of the family carves the roast.

The father and sons allow the lady of the household to leave the room ahead of them. The only exception in this country is that the wife of the President allows her husband to enter or leave a room before she does. This, however, is giving consideration to the office and not to the individual man.

Good form is based on consideration, and the well-bred man will not bring home unexpected guests to dinner without sending a message to his wife in advance. This is very easy in this day of telephones. If unavoidable circumstances make it necessary to bring an unexpected dinner guest home he should be invited to sit in the drawing room while the husband makes his explanation to his wife in another part of the house.

A gentleman never accepts invitations which do not include his wife unless they are of a strictly business nature. The exception is when a hostess asks a man to "fill in" a vacant place at a dinner party. Such invitations must be issued to the husband through his wife. He never dines at the home of a married associate unless his wife is invited. He will not go to a private home where his wife is not also a welcome guest.

Questions and Answers.

Query—I have been invited to a dinner and a dance. My husband is not invited because the hostess knows the he does not dance. Do you think it proper for me to accept? My husband does not want me to go without him. Answer—It is not proper to accept an invitation to dinner if your husband is not invited.

Query—I brought home several friends to dinner recently. My mother objected, although she instructed the maid to reset the table and was polite to them. She does no like the young men and says that she will not allow her daughter to be friendly with young men who accept an invitation so casually. I simply asked them to come in to dinner when they brought me home from the motion picture show. Do you think my mother is fair? I often ask her to allow me to have guests to dinner and she is always very sweet about it.

Answer—Yes, your mother is right. It is not polite to bring home guests for dinner without telling her in advance and asking permission. If your friends are at your home at dinner time you should wait for your mother to invite them to dinner or ask her privately to do so. The young men were very remiss in accepting such a casual invitation.

Query—How should Navy officers be addressed? I wish to write to a lieutenant in the Navy. My daughter claims he should be addressed as "Mr."

Answer—In the Navy officers from lieutenant commander up are given their titles when they are addressed in person. From lieutenant commander down to ensign they are addressed as "Mr." They are all given their titles when they are addressed in writing.

Query—Is it correct to speak to the President of the United States if you are near enough to address him in a public place?

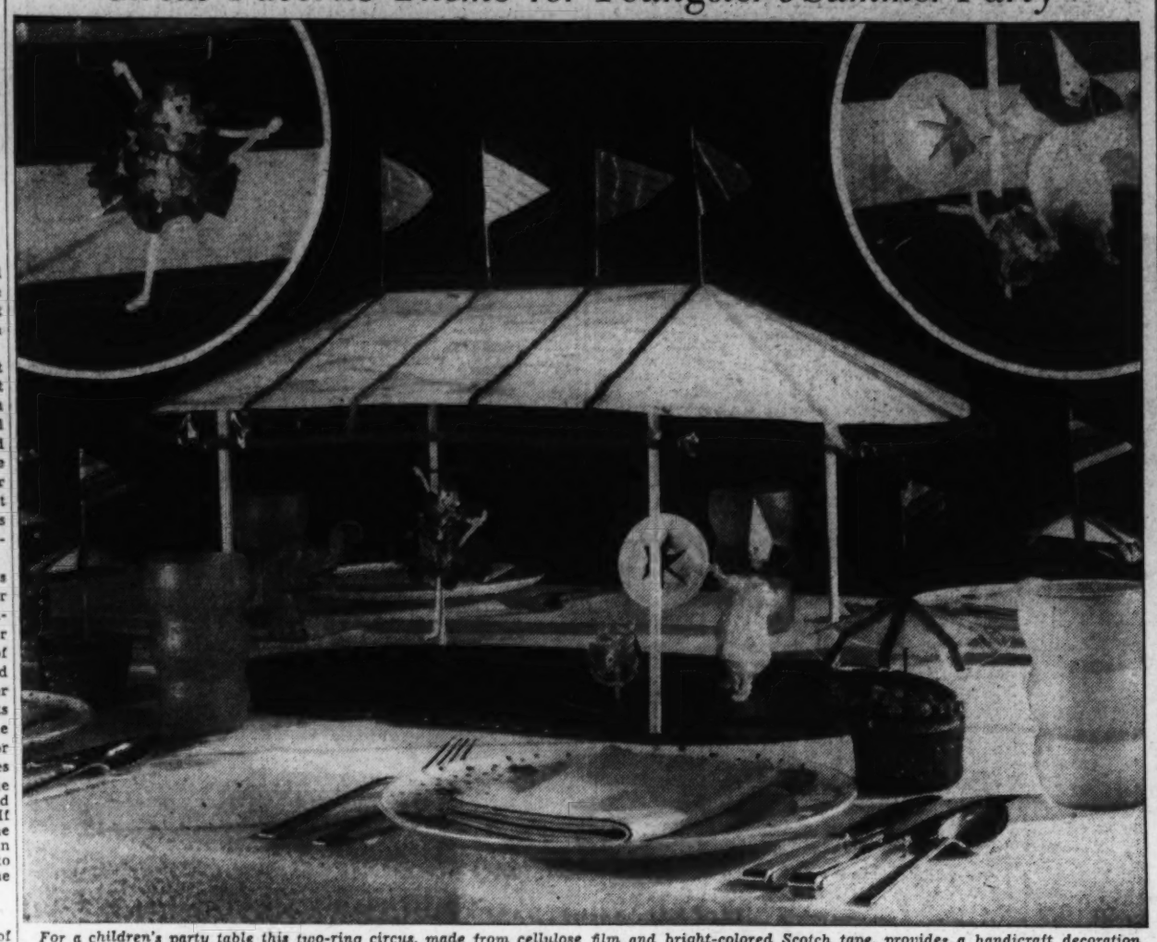
Answer—Any citizen may greet the President with a bow or a word of greeting, but, of course, should not attempt to detain him or enter into conversation with him. The Secret Service men would not allow it and you would be embarrassed. All Presidents have always answered greetings most courteously. It is better to speak or bow than to stare rudely.

Sirup Basis Offered By Italian Meringues

Italian meringue is a fluffy, frosting-like mixture made by pouring boiling sirup over egg whites beaten to a stiff stage.

This type of meringue is the basis for the most satisfactory type of sherbet and may be used in ice creams. By incorporating a large proportion of the sugar used in the sherbet recipe this way and coagulating the egg white with the hot sirup, a smoothness and fluffiness result that cannot be secured in any other way. Results justify this manipulation.

Circus Favorite Theme for Youngster's Summer Party



For a children's party table this two-ring circus, made from cellulose film and bright-colored Scotch tape, provides a handicraft decoration of juvenile appeal. The daring lady of the trapeze and the clown with his trick dog are fashioned from pipe cleaners and dressed in tape-trimmed costumes of clear film. All table decorations can be made at home. For explicit directions read the accompanying story.

Clown and His Trick Dog Turn Party Into a Circus

Youngsters Can Make the Decorations and Have Fun Doing It.

IF the children in your family have been promised a party during their summer vacation there is nothing that would intrigue them and their little friends more than a circus party, especially if the decorations for the table can be made by the little hosts or hostesses. The woman who plans this type of party for her youngsters will find that the preliminary work of making the table decorations will keep the youngsters busy and happy and out of mischief for several days before the party.

The two-ring circus centerpiece shown in the photograph is sure to have juvenile appeal and can easily be constructed at home. The open tent is built on a cardboard foundation, the roof covered with clear cellulose film and gayly striped with Scotch tape in red, green, yellow and blue. The four flags on the roof are made of the gummed gift tape, each in a different color. The daring lady hanging from a trapeze, the clown and his hoop-jumping dog, are fashioned from pipe cleaners and wear costumes of the clear film trimmed with the colored tape. The rings are outlined in red on a floor covered with crushed light green film.

How to Make It.

Make the oval floor foundation from cardboard 12 by 22 inches. Over this spread the green film, first crushing it with the hands. The circus rings are 8½-inch cardboard circles, cut out in the center to make them ¼ inch wide, then attached with transparent tape and covered with red tape. The oval-shape roof foundation is white matstock measuring 15 by 25 inches. Score along center lengthwise, slashing ends 7½ inches. Fold remaining 10 inches of scoring, lap cut ends 2¼ inches and glue. Tape No. 15 wire ½ inch from edge on underside of roof, and make four posts of 8 inch dowel sticks covered with white crepe paper.

For the roof covering, cut clear cellulose film 18 by 28 inches; fasten with red Scotch tape, continuing across the top, add stripes of blue, green, and yellow tape, and edge with blue. The pointed flags measure 2 by 3 inches and are made of tape strips gummed to clear color film. The wire masts are wound with red tape.

To form the swinging trapeze, cut No. 7 wire 14½ inches long and cover with red tape. The acrobatic lady and the clown have heads of cotton wound around a 2 inch piece of pipe cleaner and covered with clear film. Features are appliqued bits of blue and red tape. One pipe cleaner forms one arm and leg unit, making three units in all. Wire together and wind a strip of crepe paper under arms to form the body.

The lady's neck ruff is a 1¾ by 6 inch piece of clear film, bordered on one 6 inch edge with red tape and on the opposite edge with green. Double lengthwise and gather on wire. The gathered skirt is a 3 by 15 inch piece, doubled and trimmed with blue and yellow tape on one edge and red and green on the other. A strip of red tape makes her hat.

The Clown and Dog.

Before joining the clown units, cut crepe paper 5 inches with the grain and 4 inches across and paste 5 inch edges together in tube form. Slip over arm and leg wire, wrap with the same size piece of clear film and wire together around ankle and wrist. Repeat for other arm and leg unit; gather film and crepe paper under arm and join the three units. The collar is a 2¼ inch circle of the film striped with red tape and his cone hat is white crepe paper. The tissue paper hoop is made on a 2½ inch wire ring and slashed at the center.

Make the dog as follows: Two pieces of pipe cleaner 3 inches long, each bent ¾ inch for hind leg, 1¼ inches for body, and 1 inch for foreleg. Cut another cleaner 4½ inches long, bending ⅜ inch for tail, 1¼ inches for body, and ½ inch for neck. The remaining 2¼ inches is folded back twice to give the head four thicknesses. Wire units together at neck and tail. The neck ruff is clear film cut 1½ by 5½ inches with blue tape on one edge and yellow on the other.

The favors are paper nut cups covered with crushed green film over white crepe paper, and topped with striped canopy and flag.

Pink Lemonade, of Course!

Refreshments are important too. If the party is strictly an afternoon affair and the food served is in no way to take the place of a full meal, the following refreshments are suggested: Pink lemonade of course, sipped through colored straws; ginger-bread cookies cut in the shape of clowns, frosted with white and dotted with red cinnamon drops—the features may be made with small bits of colored gum drops and the cheeks tinted with colored sugar; tall scones of vanilla ice cream covered with fresh cherry preserves; and a clear paper bag filled with peanuts or popcorn as favors to be taken home rather than eaten at the party. This last is just a cautioning step lest tummy aches result from too many good things to eat.

Recipes to Whet the Appetite On Hot Days Sought by Post

IT IS A WISE woman who uses discrimination in selecting the correct appetizer for summer meals. For when the weather is especially warm and the appetite is lagging, the perfect selection of first course goes a long way in inducing finicky appetites to partake of food which they would otherwise reject.

The appetizer has become an important part of the luncheon and dinner meal in America as well as abroad. Refreshing jellied soups, chilly fruit combinations, iced or even partially frozen beverages, small, crisp salads using fruit or vegetable combinations or even small, jellied molds are just a few of the appetizers or first courses upon which a housewife depends in the summer to whet indifferent appetites. There are numerous other appetite inducements, too. Seafood combinations with interesting sauces are, of course, major appetite tempters in Washington.

Next week, in its weekly contest, The Post is asking for your favorite summer appetizer or first course. Cash awards will be offered for the five most interesting recipes. The first prize will be $5, the second $3 and the three remaining prizes $1 each.

To enter this contest merely write out the recipe for your favorite summer appetizer or first course and send it to Dorothea Duncan, in care of The Washington Post. Be sure to mail your entry in time to reach this office by Saturday. The last request is especially important, as the recipes are judged for awards at this time. Many of the recipes in previous contests have been arriving as late as Tuesday of the following week, and naturally cannot be considered for a prize.

Right Sauces Make or Mar Finest Salad

Olives and Pickles Add New Touch to Thousand Island Dressing.

THE proper selection of dressing for salads is without doubt the crowning touch upon which the success of the whole depends.

Fussy salads require simple dressings, but since so many of our salad ingredients are chosen for the ease with which they introduce fresh fruits and vegetables into menus, the majority of salads benefit by the use of diversified dressings which allow us to use the same salad foundations over and over again.

Of numerous attempts to give a modernized slant to the thousand island type of dressing, none proved of more interest than one in which chopped ripe olives were added to chopped pickled beets and hard cooked eggs, as contrasting ingredients in a foundation of tart salad dressing, with a small addition of chili sauce for traditional color. The salad dressing may be homemade or of the homemade type to be found on the market instead of the usual mayonnaise, or mayonnaise may be used if preferred.

French dressings prove amenable to change also, and readily take on new grace when such combinations as crumbled cream cheese and chopped ripe olives, or ripe olives with a restrained dash of fiffely sliced green top of fresh onions, are added for use with the new salad greens of spring which are now becoming seasonable.

Most Common Home Accident Is the Burn

Quick Treatment Urgent to Relieve Pain and Prevent Scars.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

ONE of the commonest accidents of the home is a burn. Even with all the modern conveniences and safety-first appliances, children continue to fall or run into stoves and fires, to upset kettles of boiling liquid and to set their clothes on fire.

The worst of burns is that they are often fatal or crippling, and that frequently they may leave unsightly scars. Furthermore, they are, owing to the extent of exposed surface which many burns cause, very easily infected.

Quick Treatment Needed.

A burn of any kind should be treated at once, partly to allay the pain, which is very acute, and partly because prompt treatment may prevent later complications. The purpose of the treatment should be to keep air from the wound and to prevent infection.

Picric or tannic acid ointments are the most effective applications. If they are not at hand, olive oil, lard or a paste made of soda bicarbonate and water will do very well. A layer of sterile gauze over this, held down with a loose bandage or some strips of adhesive will keep the soothing ointment in place.

Scars Unnecessary.

Many children go through life bearing unsightly scars which might have been avoided had the injury been correctly treated from the outset. The child is frequently less to blame for the injury in the first place than some adult who left the handle of a pot sticking over the edge of the stove, or failed to see that the fire screen was in place, the matches out of reach, when the baby was about.

If, to this initial carelessness, is added negligence in the treatment of the burn, the child is justified if in later years he blames his parents for his disfigurement.

Easy Icebox Desserts

Cookless cookery—ice-box magic—try it for hot days.

Not a bit of cooking is needed for that melt-in-the-mouth dessert, "Jamboree." It's quick, inexpensive, delicious. For 6 servings, use 2 dozen of those crisp little 2-inch vanilla wafers. Spread each wafer with jam—strawberry, raspberry, your favorite kind. You need about ⅓ cup.

Stack 4 jam-spread wafers one above the other for individual service, as the clever woman in the sketch is doing. Whip ¾ cup of cream, add a teaspoon of powdered sugar, ½ teaspoon vanilla, and spread cream over each of the six stacks, as shown in small sketch at upper left. Then set the dessert in your ice-box. At dinner time it will be a cold, fruity, creamy, smooth delight, as shown at lower right.

Try a jellied salmon salad for a cold main dish; make frozen salads and desserts in the refrigerator tray; tuck away a roll of pie crust wrapped in waxed paper, for quick use; make up extra white sauce and keep it on hand for quick creaming of left-over meats and vegetables.

Woodenware Cups For Summer Punch

There seems no end to the new guises in which woodenware is putting in its appearance this season.

The salad and fruit plates of last year have grown up into entire services and still the manufacturers are finding something new to do with wood.

Among the new woodenware to be featured in the first International Housefurnishings Exposition in the Merchandise Mart, Chicago, July 6-18, are sets of individual salad and fruit bowls with a delightfully quaint peasant air about them. Of unpolished wood, the little bowls are made in several different sizes. There are even goblets of wood, hand-rubbed to give them a soft velvety finish and from which the iced drinks, indispensable to a happy summer, taste amazingly good.

Wooden trays with brass rails to keep food or drinks from slipping are new and smart. Wood is also the medium for many of the new ornaments for the living room.

Red, Luscious Sour Cherries For Dessert!

Fruit Makes Unsurpassed Shortcake, Preserves, Pie and Pudding.

By Dorothea Duncan.

D. DUNCAN.

I HAVE never been cast upon a raft at sea with water all about me and not a drop to drink, but I experienced during the last two and a half weeks a feeling that I imagine was just as acute.

The source of my distress was an ill-timed tonsilectomy which was a great deal more serious than I had imagined in that it kept me from swallowing anything more interesting than milk and mush. And this had to happen right at the height of the cherry season. It certainly was an unpremeditated operation for there is no month in the year that appeals so strongly to my imagination and appetite as this one when sour red cherries sweep into the markets in their full glory.

It brings back memories of lazy June afternoons whiled away under a tree simply bursting with red cherries, of hasty picking lest the robins get their share first, of thick toothsome pies just oozing with bright red juice and flavor, of cherry shortcakes that make the strawberry shortcake of a few weeks prior seem tame, of tall scones of vanilla ice cream swathed in warm cherry preserves that were purposely left unbottled because eager children could not wait until winter for a taste.

And up to this moment not a sour red cherry has passed my lips, but if there are any more on the market, and there should be — even though a quick survey in the market the other day revealed only berries and melons—these are the desserts that are going to come to my table in quick succession!

Cherry Pudding.

4 eggs
1 cup thin cream
1 cup sugar
1 cup bread crumbs
2 tablespoons melted butter
2 teaspoons lemon juice
¼ teaspoon salt

Beat the eggs with the sugar until light; add bread crumbs, salt, and scalded cream, melted butter, lemon juice, and finally the cherries. Pour into buttered baking dish and bake in a moderate oven until the pudding is set and a delicate brown on top. The salt may be omitted if you prefer.

Line a deep pie pan with good plain paste, fill nearly full with stoned cherries, sprinkle with sugar, sifted with flour.

Cover with an upper crust, which should be rolled as thin as possible, make a vent in the center and press the edges together so that the juice will not escape during the baking. Bake in a hot oven (450 degrees F.) for 10 minutes, then reduce heat to moderate (about 375 degrees F.) for 30 minutes. Serve shortly thereafter sprinkled over the top with powdered sugar.

Cherry Puree.

Juice from 1 quart tart freshly stewed cherries
2 teaspoons arrowroot
Grated rind of 1 lemon

Heat the juice from the cherries. Add arrowroot moistened with cold water, stirring the mixture rapidly to prevent the forming of lumps. Flavor with grated lemon rind. Serve very cold with a whole cherry floating on each portion.

The recipe calls for no sugar, presuming that when the cherries were stewed sugar was added to taste.

Some Suggestions On How to Increase Guests' Enjoyment

Spend more time with your guests and less time in the kitchen if you want to enjoy your weekends at home, is the advice to hostesses from Dorothy B. Marsh, of Good Housekeeping Institute. Adopt the two-meals-on-Sunday idea, ushered in by an easy-to-get Saturday night dinner.

Sunday morning "brunch"—a combination of breakfast and lunch—may consist of halves of cantaloupe with raspberries, bacon, cornmeal waffles, creamed fried tomatoes, coffee and jam. On Saturday get the cantaloupe ready, wrap the halves in wax paper and chill until next morning. Also clean the raspberries, wash and core the tomatoes and mix the dry ingredients for the waffles.

For Sunday dinner she suggests spring vegetable soup, sliced tongue, creamed potatoes and green peppers, asparagus salad, whole wheat bread, butter, marmalade, rice pudding, cream iced tea. On Saturday you can cook the soup as well as the tongue and the rice pudding, and also wash and scale the asparagus. You can either cook the creamed potatoes and peppers and reheat on Sunday—or cook and dice the potatoes and chop the pepper—then on Sunday make the sauce and cook.

Mr. and Mrs. McKay Go on Wedding Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Randolph McKay, who were married on Wednesday, will reside at 4921 Seventh street on their return from their wedding trip the middle of next month. A reception at the home of the bride's mother followed the ceremony.

Convertible Couch for Small Apartment

A davenport or studio coach that can be transformed into a comfortable bed at night is a practical idea for the small apartment and is becoming more popular every year for it gives many persons dwelling in a two-room apartment the advantage of converting living room into bedroom when extra space is needed for guests.

Studio Couch Comes Into Own, Adds Hospitable Touch to Home

Can Be Made Into Daytime Lounging Nook With Book Shelves, Radio and Linen Compartments Built in Framework.

THE STUDIO COUCH is coming into its own in the modern home. Twentieth century hospitality includes the ability to ask guests to stay the night even though the apartment be small and only one bedroom available. This accounts for the extraordinary sales of studio couches and the transformation of the living room itself into a combination studio-bedroom. Suggested below are a few ideas to incorporate the studio couch into a lounging nook by daytime and destroy none of its advantages as an emergency bed.

A framework of rough 2 by 2 seasoned lumber is built to the necessary size. This is then covered with pressed wood and trimmed at the joints with ordinary decorative moulding obtainable from any lumber dealer. Book shelves, radio, liquor or linen compartments can be built into the end sections and it is well to include also on the top of each end section an electrical socket for lamps.

The back can be hinged at the bottom, and swing down and open to allow the storage of blankets, sheets, pillows. Units of this type can also be constructed to make use of extra box spring and mattress of either standard or special size. A Midwestern hotel was recently remodeled and refinished and leather divans were fitted into units of this type in modern private dining rooms.

Pressed wood is suggested for use here because it is easy to handle and offers none of the joining and finishing problems of regular lumber. It can be purchased in sheets up to 8 by 5 feet and the surface is smooth and it needs no finishing. It can be painted to fit the general color scheme of the room, but the rich, brown luster of the fabricated wood offers a delightful combination with other colors either in harmony or contrast.

Outdoor Meals In the Summer Make Life Gayer

Serve out-of-door meals often during the summer, suggests Esther Kimmel in July Pictorial Review, but do not expect to get by with picnic foods as a steady diet. Stick to the three squares a day and keep the picnic gayety in your service.

To keep the work down to a minimum, plan ways of carrying many things at once. The old-fashioned lazy-daisy, with its salt, pepper, and condiment containers filled and ready to use, will be of assistance. Perhaps you can provide a waterproof and dustproof cupboard where the table linen and silver may be stored for these airy meals.

Above all, don't run yourself ragged trotting back and forth. Instead, for each member of the family provide an inexpensive tray, and parcel out enough creamers, sugars, salt and pepper shakers to go around. And have each dinner act on the self-service plan from the time the filled tray is claimed inside the house until it is put back where it belongs. Whatever the dishes or the tray may be, see that they are appetizingly filled. Plan only hot dishes that will stay hot, and cold ones, cold. And do all your buttering beforehand for a runny lump of butter is not exactly tempting.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

"HUSBANDS aren't nearly as bad as they're made out to be," remarked a lady at the club the other day. "Or else mine is especially nice. He doesn't grump at me from behind his newspaper. He doesn't get mad when I tell him how to drive the car. He is as sweet as heaven about all the furniture moving I ask him to do. And he's no Mr. Milquetoast, either . . . at least he's got a reputation for being quite a fire-eating judge around town. I'd like to start a campaign on the subject of counting our blessings."

She trumped and raked in the trick. If she had a nice husband, it was partly at least because he had a pretty swell wife, we thought. She was one of those women who do things well, take things rather gayly and give other people the benefit of the doubt.

We always like to go to her house. It's not very up to the last minute in design . . . they've been busy raising a family, so the old house has had to stay pretty much as was till the littlest one gets in and out of college. But she makes it such a pleasant place. Maybe because she's always moving furniture around . . . that keeps it from getting to look like a rut. And then she's clever about slip covers and curtains. This year she has everything in lettuce green quilted linen slip covers. They look lovely in that room against the rather mellowed tones of the rug, which is predominantly brick color. The walls are done in a deep putty color, which is a mellowing background for furniture that's somewhat the worse for wear. At the windows she has a linen with a figured design in coral and peach tones with green leaves on a light brown ground.

Send a stamp for Miss Boykin's bulletin, "How to Make a Slip Cover That Won't Wrinkle or Bag."

FINDS ALL-BRAN BETTER THAN PILLS, SALTS, AND OILS

This Natural Food Relieved His Constipation*

We quote from his letter: "... So I decided to make a fair trial (of Kellogg's ALL-BRAN), with the result that I felt much improved. I have quit all laxatives since 1929.

"For 34 years, I had to take pills, salts, oils, teas, or other fluids, which did more harm than good. ALL-BRAN now is our breakfast cereal for the whole family." — Mr. Martin Wroblewski, 201 Church Street, Highland Park, Mich.

Meals low in "bulk" often lead to constipation. Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provides generous "bulk" in effective form. This "bulk" absorbs moisture, forms a soft mass, and gently exercises and cleanses the system. ALL-BRAN also furnishes vitamin B and iron.

Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. How much better to use this natural food in place of patent medicines.

Use as a cereal with milk or cream, or in cooking. ALL-BRAN is much more effective than part-bran products. It is sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

*Constipation due to insufficient "bulk" in meals.

Quick Pudding Stretches Out A Slim Meal

Caramel Dessert, Cookies Easy to Prepare for Unexpected Guests.

SATURDAY night, and somebody breaks the news that there will be a crowd for Sunday night supper. Or perhaps a hospitable member of the family announces unexpected guests for Sunday dinner. Weekend supplies are all in, with no chance of getting more until Monday. But the housewife, with a well stocked pantry shelf, including a few cans of sweetened condensed milk, is equal to the occasion. For that slim supper she plans to add a carmel pudding, which combines well with any kind of fruit, canned or fresh. Or she takes off a few minutes and makes a batch of crunchy drop cookies to add party flavor.

The carmel pudding may be prepared ahead of time and kept on hand for just such emergencies. Or it can be left to make itself Sunday morning. Just place unopened cans of sweetened condensed milk in a kettle of boiling water and keep at boiling point for 3 hours. Be sure to keep cans well covered with water. When time to serve dip the can for 1 minute in hot water, if it has been standing on the pantry shelf. Punch a hole in the bottom of the can, remove the top, run a knife dipped in hot water around the edge of the caramel, and turn out on a plate. Serve in slices, cut with a knife dipped in hot water, or in sherbet cups, with whipped cream, chopped nuts or fruit.

Cocoa Drops.

2-3 cup sweetened condensed milk
3 tablespoons cocoa
1 cup nut meats, chopped

Thoroughly blend sweetened condensed milk and cocoa. Add nut meats, mixing well. Drop by spoonfuls on buttered baking sheet. Bake in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) 15 minutes or until delicate brown. Remove from pan at once. Makes 18.

FAVORITE FOODS of FAMOUS FOLK

By Pattie Ellicott.

Harris & Ewing.

MRS. BERTRAND SNELL.

AFTER his strenuous labors as permanent chairman of the Republican National Committee, it is safe to venture that when Representative Bertrand Snell, of New York, reached home the first thing he reached for was a stuffed cookie, made after a favorite recipe of Mrs. Snell's.

Frequently stuffed cookies are on the menu at the Snells and the well known cookie jar is kept filled with them.

Mrs. Snell liked her recipe so well that when she was asked to contribute recipes to the Congressional Cook Book it was one of those she turned in. According to reports, readers of the Congressional Cook Book have had good results by following the instructions of Mrs. Snell's recipe for:

Stuffed Cookies.

1 cupful of sugar
½ cupful shortening
½ cupful sweet milk
3½ cupfuls sifted flour
3 teaspoonfuls baking powder
1 egg

Filling.

1 cupful cut raisins
2-3 cupful sugar
1 tablespoonful flour
1 cupful hot water
Vanilla
Let boil and cool.

Delicious Stuffing Of Cheese Easily Made

If you would be stamped as a successful hostess serve simple foods smartly.

Here is a delicious but easily prepared cheese stuffing that will bring enthusiastic remarks from your guests. To prepare: Use 16 ounces of Roquefort cheese, 9 ounces of cream cheese, 1 teaspoon paprika, and 1 teaspoon Lea & Perrins sauce. Force all ingredients through a very fine sieve and work until creamy. This makes an excellent stuffing for celery, canapes, and may be used for many other purposes.

Aroma Test Urged For Kitchen Spices

Those That Have Lost Their Flavor Should Be Replaced.

If you feel that you are not getting the best results in tastiness from your spices, suppose you give the little cans the aroma test. Open the covers. Unless a full-bodied fragrance gushes out to titillate your nostrils, you probably have been "aging" your spice—and spices are among the products that do not improve with age.

It may sound like extravagance, but it is common sense to throw out and replace with a new batch all spices that have lost their bouquet and aroma. Spices depend upon their delicate, volatile oils to impart flavor, and in ground spices these gradually evaporate over a period of time just as perfume loses its strength when the stopper is left off, or as flowers lose their scent when their freshness has gone.

It is penny-wise and pound-foolish to use spices that have lost their aroma, for they are bound to bring disappointment. Once their rich fragrance has escaped there is nothing that they can add to any other ingredients.

New Apparatus Photographs Tissues of Body

By the Associated Press.

A new method of photographing the soft tissues in any part of the body by the touch of a wire to the skin was demonstrated yesterday before officials of the Patent Office by Dr. Ruth B. Drown, of Los Angeles.

Based on the principle that each tissue of the body—such as heart, lungs, nerves, intestines and brain—has its own individual electro-magnetic vibration and that these can be tuned in to record themselves on photographic negatives, the new instrument was declared by Dr. Drown to produce cross-sectional or whole pictures of tissues and organs within a few minutes. No lights are used in making them.

Pictures exhibited by Dr. Drown in support of her application for a patent revealed that the instrument goes beyond the X-ray in making possible photographs of tissues which do not record through the X-ray. She said that the instrument was intended to supplement the X-ray, not to replace it.

Still a Mystery.

Mysterious in its action and almost uncanny in the way it reveals the inner secrets of the body, the instrument is far from being fully understood even by Dr. Drown, she concedes.

Essentially it is a compact radio receiving set, sensitive to practically all radio waves, connected to a photo-electric cell, which transforms electrical variations into light variations.

To photograph a muscle in almost any organ, Dr. Drown tunes the receiving set to a frequency, or wavelength, of 30 kilocycles per second. A small wire running from the set is then touched to the skin approximately over the tissue to be photographed and held there for about two minutes. To photograph the skin a frequency of only 10 kilocycles is used while to photograph bones, 70 kilocycles are required.

According to Dr. Drown's theory of the instrument's action, the natural vibration or frequency of the tissue is picked up in the radio set through the wire, is amplified, and passed into the photo-electric cell.

"It is an invisible light which acts upon the photo-electric cell, instead of a beam of visible light which the cell ordinarily receives," she explained. "This invisible light is caught and focused on sensitive photographic film.

"Sometimes, for some unknown reason, tremendous magnifications of the tissue photographed result, and then it is possible to study the living cell structure of it," she said.

"I am a physician, not a physicist, and I cannot explain technically how the instrument works. I do know that it does work and we have used it in the diagnosis of about 100 cases to date, even though it is still in the experimental stage."

The only soft tissues which have thus far resisted the specific probing of the instrument are the veins, which, because of the blue color showing through them, fail to record themselves on the film. This failure to record is due to the blue insensitivity of the photo-electric cell used.

Wife of Swindler, Ponzi, Asks Divorce

Cambridge, Mass., June 26 (U.P.).—Dark-eyed Rose M. Ponzi, attractive brunette who remained steadfastly loyal to Charles (Get Rich Quick) Ponzi throughout investigations of his $10,000,000 swindle scheme and subsequent prison terms, today filed suit for divorce.

She seeks the divorce on grounds Ponzi had "served five years and more at hard labor in State's prison." She asks no alimony.

Ponzi, who came to this country in 1903 as an ambitious lad of 21 with $2.50 capital, was deported to his native Italy some two years ago after his release from Massachusetts State Prison, where he served seven years as "a common and notorious thief" in connection with his world-famed swindle of 1920. He has lived in Italy since and now is reported in Rome.

Mrs. Ponzi, a native Bostonian and 20 years her husband's junior, did not appear at Middlesex Probate Court, where her divorce petition was filed. The action, filed by her attorney, Barnet Welansky, of Boston, is returnable September 14. The Ponzis were married February 4, 1918, at Somerville, where Mrs. Ponzi still lives. They have no children.

Police Save Boys From Potomac

Two Washington youths, attempting to swim across the Potomac River, were rescued from drowning by Harbor Police yesterday noon at the Three Sisters rocks, west of Key Memorial Bridge.

The swimmers, Howard Passina, 1301 Massachusetts avenue northwest, and Charles Herrlein, 1100 Twenty-fifth street northwest, both 16, were apparently about to sink from exhaustion, when their cries attracted the attention of Private R. C. Ault, cruising not far away in a police launch.

Ault and H. G. Jenkins, float inspector, hurried to the scene and tossed life lines to the boys.

The swimmers had started from the Virginia side and were about halfway across the river when they called for help.

Ault said the boys, although suffering from exhaustion, were not in a critical condition. He landed them on the Virginia shore.

Firefighter Hennig Entered In 'Safest Motorist' Contest

Fireman John L. Hennig, personal driver to Fire Chief Charles Schrom, is Washington's newest candidate for safe-driving honors. Yesterday he filed application to represent the District in the C. I. T. Safety Foundation-American Automobile Association search for the Nation's safest motorists.

Private Hennig has been driving an automobile since 1907. In his own car (professional drivers are barred from the contest) he has traveled more than 50,000 miles in the past ten years without an accident or traffic violation conviction.

He operated the first motor driven delivery wagon in Washington, Hennig said, while working for a meat packer back in 1907. Yesterday was also Hennig's anniversary of joining the fire department—19 years ago. He was one of the first drivers of early motorized fire apparatus.

Under plans to find the country's safest drivers, selected applicants from 48 States and the District will converge on New York August 31 to attend an "accident clinic." All expenses—with one companion each—will be paid by the C. I. T. Safety Foundation.

Applicants for the first National Safe Driver Motorcade must have driven at least 50,000 miles during the past 10 years without an accident or traffic arrest. Entries close July 15.

Holdup Gangs Take $210,000 In 2 Robberies

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, June 26.—A bank messenger reported to police late today that two men assaulted him and escaped with a satchel containing more than $10,000 in cash and $100,000 in checks.

Ralph E. Carlisles, 60, a collector for the Wells Fargo Bank for 26 years, suffered multiple scalp lacerations. He said one young robber beat him on the head with a pistol.

The messenger reported the robbery occurred as he was leaving a wholesale grocery store at Third and Berry streets.

"As I came to the bottom of the stairs a shadow showed up and a man hit me on the head," Carlisles said. "Another fellow jerked the satchel from my hand."

The robbers then entered a gray sedan and escaped.

Bank officials said the checks were not negotiable. They stated Carlisles was one of their most trusted employes.

$100,000 Gem Hold-up.

Chicago, June 26 (AP).—Jack Baumgold, a partner in the Baumgold Brothers Jewelry Co. of New York, told police today he was robbed of $100,000 in jewelry by four men who kidnaped him and Gerald Lakin, a jewelry salesman, from under the eyes of a bodyguard in a taxicab on the near North Side.

Baumgold appeared at the Chicago Avenue Police Station shortly after the bodyguard, C. A. Rodhe, and the taxicab driver, reported the kidnaping.

Baumgold had a severe cut on the head where he said he was slugged by the robbers. He was taken to the Henrotin Hospital for treatment.

The kidnaping occurred at North Dearborn and West Huron streets. Baumgold and Lakin were thrown from the robbers' car three blocks farther north.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office

By Betty Read.

Civil service support by the National Democratic Convention was praised and its lack of interest in securing the franchise for District of Columbia residents was condemned yesterday by heads of groups interested in the affairs of Government employes.

Mrs. Bernice B. Heffner, secretary and acting president of the American Federation of Government Employes, termed "significant" the fact that the party plank on the merit system "embodies so definitely the policy of the A. F. G. E."

The plank pledged the "immediate extension of the merit system through the classified civil service to all nonpolicy-making positions in the Federal service."

The federation, Mrs. Heffner pointed out, in its 1935 legislative program, expressed its civil service policy in practically the same words as the Democrats chose for their plank. The federation support read, "protection and extension of the merit system by covering into the civil service all positions in the executive service which do not have to do with Administration policies.

Case Presented by Green.

The 1936 policy of the federation is slightly different in wording, but embodies the idea that all nonpolicy-making positions should be placed under civil service.

"President William Green of the American Federation of Labor went to Philadelphia to present the case of Government employes," said Mrs. Heffner. "He has succeeded in getting strong merit system planks in both the Democratic and Republican Party platforms, for which we are profoundly grateful."

Employes in Government offices all over the city watched with interest for the action of the Democratic leaders, and inclusion of indorsement of the merit system was particularly noted in those departments and offices already under the Federal ruling. In several of the emergency agencies the question of whether the system would be extended to include them in the near future was discussed.

On the other hand, the attitude of the convention platform makers in refusing the include support for securing the right to vote in the District by making it of sufficient importance to be a plank was thought to be "merely a way out." The convention adopted a resolution calling on Congress to appoint a committee to study the subject.

Harry N. Stull, first vice president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, a group dedicated to better conditions within the District, declared "I'm afraid this won't amount to much."

"I suppose anything is helpful that draws attention to the fact that thousands of Government employes are disfranchised at each election because they do not have the right to vote for the people who administer our laws," he said.

Time Seen As Not Ripe.

"The fact that the convention turned the matter down as a plank seems to indicate that the party does not believe the time is ripe to do anything. The matter is really clean-cut and needs no Congressional committee to investigate whether Government workers and other residents of Washington have a right to vote," he said.

Because of the situation both parties are maintaining through the summer offices to give information about absente voting. Some States, Stull said, allow voting by mail, others do not permit it and the same applies to registration. Stull has been active for some years in the absentee voting office of the National Capital Republican Club.

And speaking of Government employes, those out of the country are sometimes forgotten about, but it is a satisfaction to know that Congress, in its closing days, passed the bill to extend to employes of the Government-owned Alaskan Railroad the same retirement plan as exists in the Panama Canal Zone.

The little inter-department magazine of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce prints a note that Dr. R. L. Harding, chief of the metals and minerals division returned from a trip to Denver recently with the degree of doctor of philosophy, "conferred by the Rotary Club of that fair city." And a number of people have smiled or laughed aloud when the subject was mentioned.

Charles W. Stewart, head of the capital stock tax division of the Internal Revenue Bureau is back at his desk again after a long absence due to recouperation from an operation.

Poor Indian to Get Due.

"Lo; the poor Indian."

He is much misrepresented in his historical aspect and was really a peace-loving early inhabitant—the Pilgrim fathers and their scalping stories notwithstanding.

The Smithsonian Institution in co-operation with the Federal Office of Education tomorrow gives its weekly broadcast on the popularized results of its research into the early Indian tribes, their stories, their culture and their tradition.

James P. Prindle 3d, the editor of these broadcasts and an employe in the education office, has been working closely with Dr. Philip Sterling chief of the Bureau of Ethnology, in compiling the material and says there never was a race of men so misunderstood as the Indians.

"The Iroquois Indians have their own League of Nations including five tribes which dominated the Eastern part of the United States and kept peace for 350 years," he said.

"What modern nation could boast of such an accomplishment? Many features of the old Indian League are similar to those of our League of Nations today.

"The Indian was a peace-loving man, and no Indian ever broke a treaty. They lived in stone houses and were, and still are, such great orators that the speakers at the Republican or Democratic conventions cannot approach them for colorful language or co-ordinated thought," he said.

The material these two Government workers have compiled in their public education program touches on features of Indian life which they say are responsible for many of the ideas in the American Constitution.

When the "white savages," as the Indians called the early settlers, came to America there were about 1,000,000 Indians here, research shows, and this number has diminished by nearly two-thirds.

The type of educational broadcast which the Government is sponsoring is the first of its kind in the history of the radio, Prindle said, although something similar was attempted by the British Broadcasting Co.

Fears for Wilkins Expressed by Wife

New York, June 26 (AP).—Fears for the safety of her explorer husband, Sir Hubert Wilkins, were expressed tonight by Lady Wilkins after eight days had passed without any word from him or his boat, the Antarctic exploration vessel Wyatt Earp.

Sir Hubert, with a crew of ten, including a wireless operator, sailed from New York June 17 for Norway, where he was to deliver the Wyatt Earp. Lady Wilkins said he had arranged to communicate with her by wireless daily; but no word has come from him, and efforts to call the boat have been unavailing.

At Lady Wilkin's request, Navy and Coast Guard radios will broadcast calls to the Wyatt Earp tonight and ask ships at sea to be on the watch for her.

School Heads Pick Holmes, Smith as Aids

3 Others Are Named by D. C. Board to Fill Vacant Posts.

Principals to Take Over Duties Performed by Dr. Kramer.

The Board of Education at a special meeting yesterday afternoon appointed Dr. Harvey A. Smith and Dr. Chester W. Holmes as assistant superintendents of schools and made three other appointments to fill vacant positions of principals in as many schools.

Dr. Smith, who has been principal of Central High School since 1929, will be assistant superintendent in charge of senior high schools and of Wilson Teachers College. Dr. Holmes, who has been principal of the Anacostia junior and senior high school since last September, will have charge of all junior high schools.

The position that Holmes will fill was created by the new appropriation bill which passed Congress just before its adjournment.

John Paul Collins was appointed to fill the Anacostia High School principalship vacated by Dr. Holmes. Collins has been principal of the Langley Junior High School.

Alice Deal Head.

The new Langley school principal will be Mrs. M. R. Merritt, former head of Alice Deal Junior High. Miss Bertie Backus will become principal of Alice Deal.

Miss Backus' former position as assistant superintendent in charge of character education was discontinued after Congress' failure to appropriate funds for continuing the character education experiment.

Dr. Smith, the new senior high schools head, is a native of Pennsylvania and has had wide experience as a teacher and school administrator in that State. He received his bachelor of arts degree at Franklin and Marshall College in 1914, his master of arts from the University of Pennsylvania in 1921 and a Ph. D. in school administration from Columbia Teachers College in 1929. He came here in the same year to become principal of Central High.

Dr. Holmes, who will have charge of junior high schools, was educated at Harvard College and at Harvard Graduate School of Education. He received his Ph. D. from George Washington School of Education this year.

Cambridge Teacher.

Holmes was a teacher and school administrator in Cambridge and Holyoke, Mass., before coming here in 1928, when he was named principal of Langley Junior High School. He went from there to Anacostia Junior and Senior High last September.

The Board of Education, in making the new appointments, acted on the recommendation of its personnel committee, headed by Robert A. Maurer. The committee followed suggestions made by Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools.

The two new assistant superintendents will have duties formerly performed by the late Dr. Stephen E. Kramer, first assistant superintendent of schools.

The first assistant superintendency was given earlier this week to Robert L. Haycock, assistant superintendent in charge of white elementary schools. Haycock will retain supervision of the grade schools.

In recommending Holmes and Smith, both of whom are comparatively young educators, to ranking official posts, Supt. Ballou cited them for the "respect and confidence" each had won in their respective school communities.

"He (Smith) knows public-school education especially on the senior high school level," said Ballou. "He deals sympathetically and kindly with all problems relating to pupils, parents and teachers."

Holmes has been a popular principal at Anacostia during the last year. His "no-homework" experiment, conducted during the last six weeks of the school term, won overwhelming support from parents of the community.

Cites Ability.

"His ability as an administrator, as an educational leader, and as a scholar in the field of education, has impressed itself upon all those with whom he has come in contact," Ballou said of Holmes.

In addition to the 12 junior high schools for white pupils, the three white vocational schools will be under Holmes' supervision.

In approving Miss Backus' appointment to the Alice Deal principalship the board acted on her request to be returned to the school of which she was formerly principal. Miss Backus was taken from her post as principal at Alice Deal to direct the newly launched character education experiment two years ago.

With the discontinuation of the experiment this month Miss Backus asked to be returned to her former position. She told Dr. Ballou such an assignment would give her opportunity to compile materials developed through character education work.

Collins, who goes to Anacostia School, was graduated from George Washington University in 1929 with a bachelor of arts degree. He received his master of arts degree a year ago from Catholic University. He was first appointed a teacher of physical training at the Eastern High School in March, 1923.

He served also as principal of Hine Night School. In 1928 he was promoted to the assistant principalship of Eastern High School. He was made prncipal of Langley Junior High School last September.

Mrs. Merritt was assigned to Alice Deal when Miss Backus left there two years ago, and her work there since earned for her Dr. Ballou's recommendation which led to her transfer to Langley.

ABC Board's Ruling Is Upset By D.C. Heads

Brinkley Liquor License Had Been Canceled in Gambling Case.

The Alcoholic Beverage Control Board was reversed yesterday by the District Commissioners upon recommendation of the acting corporation counsel in the case of Brinkley's, Inc., 533 Eighth street southeast. The A. B. C. board had ordered cancellation of an on-sale liquor license.

Eugene Brinkley, president of Brinkley's, Inc., last winter pleaded guilty to a charge of violating the gambling statute and is now serving time for the offense.

Following his admission the A. B. C. board moved to cancel the license on the basis of a sworn stipulation obtained from Brinkley early in 1935 that he would surrender the license if convicted of the gambling charge, on which he had then been indicted.

Vernon E. West, acting corporation counsel, reported to the Commissioners that the board had failed to require Brinkley to renew his oath as to the stipulation when the license was renewed in 1936, just prior to his pleading guilty in District Supreme Court.

Since there was no evidence that Brinkley conducted any of his gambling operations on the same premises with liquor sales, West pointed out there was no ground for revocation under the District A. B. C. act.

The board had recognized this and had ordered the license canceled on the ground that it was inadvertently issued.

West held that the statute nowhere gives such authority to cancel a license.

Princeton Alumni Give 3 Scholarships

The Princeton University War Memorial prize scholarship committee of the Potomac district yesterday announced selection of three candidates and an alternate for the awards. If the students pass entrance requirements, they will receive $225 annually through their four-year college careers. They plan to enter Princeton this fall.

The candidates are Douglas Reid, 18, son of H. F. Arthur Schoenfeld, 3448 Thirty-fourth place northwest, a graduate of St. Alban's School here; John S. Whelen, 18, Berlin, Md., graduate of St. Andrew's School, Middletown, Del.; Frederic A. Fletcher, jr., 18, Baltimore, graduate of Gilman School there.

The alternate is Robert H. Mcbride, 18, 3000 Tilden street northwest, son of Harry A. McBride, graduate of Friends School.

The Potomac district includes Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia. Each scholarship is given in the name of a Princeton man who died in the World War.

Police Ban Talking In Detention Room

Maj. Ernest W. Brown of Metropolitan Police yesterday issued an order that an officer must be on guard in the Police Department detention room 24 hours a day. Heretofore, the room has been unguarded and prisoners could talk freely to each other—even about their cases.

Maj. Brown's order giving instructions to the officer in charge of the detention home read in part:

"Prisoners shall not be allowed to talk to each other while in the detention room. This order must be strictly enforced. If such prisoners are allowed to talk to each other, the investigation being made may be materially affected."

Georgetown Men Shifted; Hogan Dean

Fordham President Give Graduate School Post; Five Transferred.

Parsons Joins Faculty; Ex-Editor in Chief of 'America.'

The Very Rev. Aloysius J. Hogan, S. J., president of Fordham University for the past six years and the Rev. Wilfrid Parsons, S. J., writer on political, sociological and economic problems, were assigned yesterday to the graduate school of Georgetown University, the former as dean and the latter as professor.

Three other professors were assigned to the College of Arts and Sciences and five members of the faculty were transferred to duties elsewhere. The faculty changes were announced by the Very Rev. Joseph A. Murphy, S. J., provincial of the Maryland-New York Province. Dr. Arthur A. O'Leary, S. J., Georgetown president, was in New York at the time.

In his absence, Dr. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., chancellor of Georgetown, welcomed the news of the appointments of Dr. Hogan and Dr. Parsons.

"Dr. Hogan," he said, "has had an excellent experience in research methods at Cambridge University, England, and will greatly strengthen the graduate faculty in the special field in which he is well qualified."

Praises Dr. Parsons.

Concerning Dr. Parsons, who recently retired as editor in chief of America after 12 years, Dr. Walsh said: "He has likewise been engaged in educational and literary pursuits in Europe as well as in America. His long and successful editorship of a literary magazine, his continuing studies in modern political, sociological and economic problems and his teaching experience in the United States all combine to create a fund of information tempered by wide human observation that should make his graduate classes much sought after, particularly in these confused times."

Dr. Parsons arrived in Washington last night. He will be professor of European history in the Graduate School and will write and lecture on sociology and economics.

Dr. Hogan, who has been succeeded as president of Fordham, largest Jesuit universities, by the Rev. Robert I. Gannon, S. J., of St. Peter's College, in Jersey City, is expected to take up his duties at Georgetown July 1.

The new dean of the Graduate School is noted as classiast, a prominent Jesuit authority on the classics. He succeeds the Rev. Frederick R. Sohon, S. J., who is to remain at Georgetown. Father Sohon will devote all his time, probably, to the science of seismology, having been director of the Georgetown Seismological Observatory for years.

McFadden Gets Post.

Other new assignments to Georgetown College include that of the Rev. Daniel O'Connell McFadden, S. J., as professor of classical languages in the sophomore department. He has been a teacher of rhetoric for the past six years at St. Francis Xavier College, New York City.

The Rev. Arthur A. Conniff, S. J., who has just completed his work in theology, was assigned as lecturer in biology. Leo G. Monaghan, S. J., of St. Louis, will become an instructor in English literature in the undergraduate department. He has just finished a course of graduate work in Latin at St. Louis University.

Among the five professors transferred elsewhere, the Rev. Leo F. Andries, librarian for the past year, has been assigned to Brooklyn, N. Y. The Rev. George C. McCauley, S. J., who taught philosophy in the Foreign Service School and Religion, will become assistant dean of studies and librarian at St. Joseph's College, Philadelphia.

The Rev. James L. Harley, S. J., who has been studying biology at Georgetown, has been transferred to Gonzaga High School here as professor of biology. The Rev. Atlee F. X. Devereaux, S. J., major professor of Latin, is assigned to Holy Trinity Church here.

Ordained in 1923.

Father Hogan has done much in recent years to build up Fordham University, where he became president in 1930. He advanced the graduate school and reorganized the law department. A Ph. D. of Cambridge, England, he has taught and done research in the classics and is interested in medaeval drama. He entered the order in 1906, was ordained in 1928.

Due to the close relationships betaween Georgetown and Fordham, Father Hogan has many friends among the Georgetown alumni and is well known in Washington. He was born in Philadelphia, August 5, 1891, and graduated from St. Joseph's College.

Fathe Parsons also is a native of Philadelphia and is 49. He took his graduate studies at the Gregorian University in Rome and is a master of arts and doctor of divinity of Woodstock College, Md.

He is president of the American Press, a Fellow of the American Geographic Society and a member of the Catholic Press Association, the Academy of Political Sciences and of the United States Catholic Historical Association.

Will Become Dean.

At Woodstock College, the theological seminary affiliated with Georgetown, the Very Rev. Edward C. Phillips, S. J. formerly director of the Georgetown Astronomical Observatory and former provincial of the Maryland-New York Province, will become dean of the faculty of philosophy.

Three priests on the staff of St. Aloysius Church also have been transferred. They are the Rev. John P. Gallagher, S. J. who will go to the Church of Jesu, Philadelphia, as will the Rev. James A. McCarl, S. J., and the Rev. Joseph I. Fink, S. J., who will go to St. Andrews-on-the-Hudson.

Incoming clergymen include the Rev. Thomas Matthews, S. J., and the Rev. Dionysius McCarthy, S. J.

At Holy Trinity Church, in Georgetown, the Rev. Andrew V. Graves, S. J., will be transferred to Pomfret, Conn., to pursue his studies. He will be succeeded by Father Devereaux.

"Somebody Scalded My Pet"

Margaret McCrae, 13, of 4578 Conduit road northwest, shows where Chinn, her pet Chow, was scalded after the dog had appeared in Police Court yesterday in a cruelty to animals trial.

Scalded Dog Takes the Stand, But Cruelty Case Is Dismissed

Man Accused of Pouring Boiling Water on Young Chow Which Strayed Onto His Porch; Evidence Insufficient, Judge Rules.

After Exhibit A—an 6-month-old Chow dog—jumped nimbly atop a counsel table in Police Court yesterday to show an ugly scar across his back, Judge Walter J. Casey dismissed cruelty to animals charges against Tromas E. Carpenter, 1500 block of Elliot place northwest, accused of pouring scalding water over the animal.

Evidence introduced by the prosecution, Judge Casey held, failed to substantiate charges. Two agents of the Washington Humane Society—George Wech and Robert Poplar—accused Carpenter of scalding the dog when it wandered onto the rear porch of his home.

Chinn, pet of Margaret McCrae, 13, 4578 Conduit road northwest, accompanied his mistress into court. Hair across a large area of the dog's back was missing.

Harry Kinder, who lives next door to Carpenter, said he saw the animal scalded, but was unable to identify Carpenter as the guilty person. Kinder said he was standing on the porch of his home and saw Chinn run onto Carpenter's porch. A moment later, he testified, a door opened and water was thrown on the dog.

When witnesses failed to identify Carpenter, Defense Attorney Edward O'Connell moved for dismissal. Judge Casey granted the motion.

3,423 Federal Workers Given 40-Hour Week

President Roosevelt Signs Bill Benefiting Group McCarl Ruled Out.

Under a bill signed by President Roosevelt yesterday 3,423 employes of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving go on the 40-hour week.

40-hour week.

The measure took in the group excluded when the so-called Thomas amendment was passed last year, placing all the Government's mechanical employes on a 40-hour basis.

Comptroller General McCarl ruled the bureau workers out on that amendment, because their salaries are fixed by the classification act rather than by some wage authority.

The bill was passed the middle of this month by the House. Before this it had been adopted by the Senate.

Reason for the bill was to extend a provision of the 1935 Independent offices Act, which already had placed 780 mechanics of the Bureau on the 40-hour week, while it left the other employes on the 44-hour week.

It was pointed out at the time of the enactment of the bill that the 1935 act brought a difficult situation and a stagger-hour system for the mechanical trade workers.

President Roosevelt late yesterday received from the Women's Union of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving of the National Federal Employes a telegram expressing their thanks for his action.

At the same time Local Union No. 105 also sent a telegram of thanks to Luther C. Steward, president, and Gertrude M. McNally, secretary-treasurer, for "their effectiveness in securing the 40-hour week for the employes."

Veteran Loses Suit to Force Job From U. S.

Justice Peyton Gordon, in the District Supreme Court, yesterday dismissed a suit brought by Benjamin J. Spang, World War veteran, of Philadelphia, to compel the Government to favor veterans, their widows and wives, in the allocation of jobs in work relief projects.

Spang, who won a signal victory in Pennsylvania several months ago, only to be met with a reversal in the Pennsylvania Circuit Court of Appeals, claimed Congress had directed that the veterans and their dependents should be favored in the works administration.

In his ruling Justice Gordon asserted that he accepted the circuit court ruling as being controlling, and for that reason he dismissed Spang's suit, which would have tied up all Federal work projects until such time as veterans and their dependents were given preference in obtaining jobs.

Spang obtained a ruling by the Federal court in Philadelphia which required the Government to favor veterans. The Government appealed the case, and obtained a reversal of that opinion in the Appellate Court. Afterwards, Spang brought suit in the District where he could obtain legal service on Government aids, so that his suit, if favorably acted upon, would be binding.

The ruling was based on the theory that to grant preferential emergency work relief to veterans would be to "fly in the face" of others who sought Governmental relief and would not be in accordence with the law.

Bishop Sheil Lauds Youth, Blames Adult

Tells Catholic Women Problems of Young Due to Elders.

Reviews Work Done by His Organization in Chicago.

The Most Rev. Bernard J. Sheil, auxiliary bishop of Chicago, told delegates to the Second Annual Institute of the National Council of Catholic Women yesterday that the problems of youth were created by their elders.

"Youth is not a problem," he said. "We are making problems for them; we are surrounding them with problems. They want to be led, they want your guidance."

Asking his hearers, who lead youth groups in various sections of the country, to bring sympathy and understanding to their work, Bishop Sheil reviewed for them the growth of the Catholic Youth organization, which he founded in Chicago.

Began With Boxing Program.

The organization began, he said, with a boxing program which enlisted over 2,000 boys and young men. He explained that this program taught discipline and self-control and did much to develop individuality in theboys taking part.

Eventually the social service program was extended to include medical and dental service, hotels for transient men and an aviation school.

In one year, he said, 50,000 young persons benefited from the free medical and dental service. The seven hotels established for transients gave accommodations to nearly 4,000 young men from 47 States. One of the hotels is for the use of boys paroled from penitentiaries. During the past year, the bishop stated, jobs were obtained for 150 of the youths in this latter group.

Besides the aviation school, the bishop told the youth workers, there are twelve other occupational schools.

Panel Discussion Held.

The concluding session of the Youth Institute, held last night at the National Catholic School for Social Service, featured a panel discussion on homemaking.

Clara V. Bradley, teacher of home economics at the social service school, reviewed the history of her field of study and told how social and industrial changes had affected homemaking.

The young woman's viewpoint toward homemaking was given by Mrs. James F. Ryan, who urged that girls' education has a more direct bearing on use in the home.

John O'Connor told what the young man thinks of domestic life. He said that religion was one of the best means of combating the embittered state of mind often caused by economic difficulties.

Arlington Bridge Will Get 4 Equestrian Groups.

Decoration of Arlington Memorial Bridge, delayed for years by governmental economy, is to go forward immediately.

C. Marshall Finnan, superintendent of National Capital Parks, yesterday announced the Budget Bureau has released $148,000 which had been impounded under the economy act, thereby making possible construction of four equestrian groups for the monumental span.

Finnan also revealed the parks office will soon advertise for bids to build a three-arch stone bridge on nearby Columbia Island.

Two of the equestrian groups will be installed at the Lincoln Memorial end and the other two at the Virginia approach. They are being executed by Leo Friedlander and James Earle Fraser, New York sculptors.

Rescue Squad Frees Boy of 4 Trapped in Car

Lad Taken From Wreckage After Collision; Trolley Hits Truck.

A truck driver was seriously injured and a 4-year-old boy was trapped nearly an hour in the wreckage of his mother's automobile in traffic accidents yesterday.

Glen B. Craig, 38, of 3347 M street northwest, the truck driver, was seriously injured when a street car struck his truck near Glen Echo, Md.

The driver was thrown clear of his vehicle, which overturned by the force of the impact. He was taken to Georgetown Hospital, where he was treated for internal injuries and severe cuts and bruises.

Witnesses told Montgomery County police the street car was headed toward Washington when Craig's truck apparently stalled on the tracks while crossing near Conduit road.

Bethesda Rescue Squad worked 43 minutes to extricate Shirley Stephen, jr., 4, of 3515 Thirty-sixth street northwest, from the wreckage of his mother's car after it collided with a bush at Forty-second and Harrison streets northwest.

The child's foot was caught between the floor boards and a side of the car. Rescue workers were forced to cut through the car in order to release Shirley.

Taken to Georgetown Hospital, he was treated for a possible fracture of the leg and cuts and bruises. His mother, Mrs. Lula M. Stephens, 42, was treated for shock.

Eleven-year-old Jane Doyle, of 300 Elm street, Chevy Chase, Md., was slightly injured by a hit and run driver as she crossed Wisconsin avenue at Bethesda on her bicycle. She was treated for shock by a physician.

Meanwhile, John T. Doyle, 77, former secretary of the Civil Service Commission, was reported yesterday to be improving at Emergency Hospital, where he was taken Tuesday night after having been struck by an automobile at Florida avenue and Twentieth street northwest.

Mr. Doyle, who lives at 1833 Nineteenth street northwest, is suffering from a fractured leg and cuts on the head.

Woman Falls 3 Stories, But Escapes Injury

Mrs. Lillian Litzenburg, who lives on the third floor of an apartment house at 3520 Connecticut avenue northwest, fell from the third floor last night, but she was uninpured.

She lost her balance while putting a screen in place and fell. She grasped a ledge and hung there a few moments, then she lost her grip and fell again, this time on an awning.

Navy Hospital To Get Health Unit Building

Will Be Effective When New Bethesda Center Is Completed.

Transfer of the buildings now occupied by the National Institute of Health at Twenty-fifth and E streets northwest, to the nearby Naval Hospital, has been agreed to by the Treasury Department, it was learned yesterday.

Hospital officials said that the institute laboratories would be turned over to the Navy Department as soon as the new $1,363,000 National Public Health Center is erected in Bethesda, Md.

According to present plans the institute laboratories, which include two modern buildings, are to be converted into an enlarged Naval Medical School and Naval Medical Center. An additional hospital wing may be added.

The old Naval Observatory Building, originally erected in 1845 and which now houses the medical school, is to be demolished. The building occupies part of the site chosen for the construction of the Naval Hospital, already authorized but held up pending the appropriation of funds.

By transferring the medical school and medical center to the institute laboratories when they are taken over, it was pointed out, it will be possible to provide greater bed space in the new hospital. Plans for the hospital called for the inclusion of a new medical school.

Expansion of facilities at the Naval Hospital has been sought for many years by Navy authorities. At the hearings before the subcommittee on appropriations at the last session of Congress, Rear Admiral P. S. Rossiter, surgeon general of the Navy, testified that the hospital had a bed capacity of 178 beds, 99 per cent of which were in use.

Stolen $780 Stolen; 2d Man Arrested

McBride was arrested in a downtown hotel last night and charged with grand larceny in connection with theft of $780 from the safe of the Army-Navy Club.

Two weeks ago, Edward Myers, clerk at the club, was arrested for the theft and confessed to the crime.

Laundry Damaged $1,400 by Flame

Fire shortly before noon yesterday caused damage estimated at $1,400 in the laundry and building at 1721 Ninth street northwest, owned by Charlie Chin Sam. A faulty flue in the laundry machinery is believed responsible.

The Chinese, who has been ill for several weeks, was asleep in his living quarters on the second floor when he was wakened by the smell of smoke.

Autoist Grabs Gun, Foils D. C. Holdup

Vincent W. Nunez stopped his car at a red light on Constitution avenue about 9:30 p. m. yesterday.

A man jumped to the running board. He pointed a pistol and said: "Stick 'em up!"

Nunez grabbed the gun, and the bandit fled, he told police.

Nunez is an employe of an oil company.

Robinson Hits Hard in Story Of Racketeers

Earle Film Packs a Punch; Donald Novis at Fox; Other Programs.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"BULLETS OR BALLOTS." First National picturization of a story by Martin Mooney, adapted to the screen by Seton I. Miller, starring Edward G. Robinson, with Joan Blondell, Humphrey Bogart, Barton MacLane, Frank McHugh, Joseph King, George E. Stone, Henry O'Neill, Henry Kolker, Gilbert Emery, Herbert Rawlinson, Louise Beavers and Richard Purcell. Directed by William Keighley. Reviewed Friday morning.

It is quite obvious, after viewing this tense and grimly belligerent film, that the so-called "gangster picture" has taken on new character and significance.

BELL.

It no longer is content to be denominated a mere shooting match between the powers that prey and the sturdy proponents of law and order, but, instead, takes on the lusty lineaments of a penetrating analysis of the present-day social order in our large cities and points out in no equivocal terms what may best be done about combating a form of racketeering that is deep-rooted in its potentialities for evil.

While there is a considerable inclination on the part of the text of Mr. Martin Mooney's big-town narrative to preach an unassailable social gospel, there also repose in it all of the necessary ingredients of thrilling melodrama and acute interest. Entertainment never is sacrificed to even the most salutary sort of propaganda during the course of this vigorous recital of the law's triumph over the firmly intrenched forces of graft, commercial piracy and murderous conspiracy. "Bullets or Ballots" hits hard and often at an intolerable condition in our principal cities and reveals statistical truths about the growth of racketeering that are as fabulous as they are shocking.

Story Based on Actuality.

The center of interest in the unfolding of the story of a metropolis' fight against the elusive "big shots" of a colossal utilization of unlawful means of acquiring enormous returns on meager investments is the demoted plain-clothes man who has the courage to tackle a big job single handed. The character of Johnny Blake, played with his accustomed skill at this sort of thing by Edward G. Robinson, is popularly supposed to have been fashioned by Author Mooney upon the career of Johnny Broderick, the New York detective who tames the toughest of the hoodlums with his bare knuckles. There is more than a suggestion of the valorous Mr. Broderick, to be sure, in the estimable figure of a man limned by Mr. Robinson in perhaps as effective a role as he has had since "Little Caesar" or "Five Star Final."

Gaining the confidence of the head man in a crime syndicate that reports only to a secret and mysterious clique of Wall Street bankers, Johnny Blake himself becomes the big shot in an organization of rackets returning a profit of many millions a year. Pursuing a solitary hunch and a single-handed fight against fatal odds, if his foot slips just once, he brings the whole gang to justice in as stirring a series of climacteric incidents as even the most avid thrill-seeker could wish. The penalty he pays for his fidelity to a high concept of public duty is a severe one that lends added strength to the picture's palpable and worthy argument on the side of retributive justice for all transgressors of the law.

Strong Supporting Cast.

The picture has been especially well cast, except for the fact that in stature Mr. Robinson is not quite the ideal selection for the flatfoot who goes about bowling over husky antagonists by the sheer power of his punch. His fistic prowess at times is just a little hard to take. Otherwise, the illusion is perfect.

Pitted against the sagacity of Detective Blake are the surly machinations of Barton MacLane and Humphrey Bogart, two of the screen's foremost exponents of the homicidal segment of society. They are seconded by as precious a mob of thugs as you would find in a day's search and accountable to an elegant band of scoundrels impersonated with skill by Henry Kolker, Gilbert Emery and Herbert Rawlinson.

Joan Blondell is the Harlem blonde who falls in love with Blake and snowballs a numbers racket from pennies into millions with the aid of that dusky and delightful comedienne, Louise Beavers. The minor roles are played with adeptness by a fine supporting cast led by Frank McHugh.

Two Showstoppers on Stage.

The stage bill for the week presents two acts that stop the show—the Yacht Club Boys, in the headline spot, and Tommy Trent, with his Punch and Judy show and a phosphorescent figure of a puppet expert at truckin' that tickled the risibilities of the audience mightily at yesterday's first performance.

The Yacht Club Boys, otherwise the Messrs. Adler, Kern, Kelly and Mann, sing four of their trickiest songs with a glibness and comic interpretative finesse that gloss over the slightly tabasco flavor of some of their lyrics. Their "Alphabet Song" of the New Deal bureaus, the "Indirect Descendant of the Tsar" and the "Square Deal Campaign Song," from "Thanks a Million" are the high spots of their peppery interval on the stage.

The bill is opened by the Earle and Fortune Dance Revue—an excellent offering of its kind—and includes those old favorite Arnaut Brothers, who have expanded their familiar acrobatic violin act to the point where it now tells the story of "Three Loving Birds," instead of two, by the inclusion of their handsome and talented sister, Nellie.

A "Popeye" cartoon comedy, "What, No Spinach!" the Paramount News and Freddie Clark's orchestral interludes augment a feature that probably will establish a new trend in "crime doesn't pay" films.

She Runs the Numbers Racket

All of the rackets popular with the country's metropolitan hoodlums are given an airing in "Bullets or Ballots," the foremost screen feature of the bill for the current week at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater, including the "penny ante" game of picking the right number to cash in to the tune of 600 to 1. It is Joan Blondell who operates the Harlem branch of this profitable swindle in the picture in which Edward G. Robinson is starred as a star-spangled cop who turns up the big shots by dint of plenty nerve and iron fists. It is a picture well worth seeing for more reasons than one—prime entertainment being among them.

"PRIVATE NUMBER." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of a play by Cleves Kinkead, adapted to the screen by Gene Markey and William Conselman, starring Loretta Young and Robert Taylor, supported by Patsy Kelly, Basil Rathbone, Marjorie Gateson, Paul Harvey, John Miljan and Monroe Owsley. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Reviewed Friday night by Dorothea Lewis.

Sorry, but this is just a wrong number as far as we're concerned, in spite of lots of favorite people in it.

The whole business of the feature picture is fake—plot, characters, comic and sinister and romantic, assorted; dialogue and all. The first reel or so is reasonably amusing in spots but eventually the vehicle gives a tired sigh and bogs down, mired in a field of clinches.

Ellen is a little country girl, "who doesn't know the time," to quote the picture. She becomes the personal maid of the gentle Mrs. Winfield in a very wealthy manor house, presided over by a tyrannical butler, and lived in by a very handsome son, Dic Winfield, a college lad.

The Plot Seems Familiar.

Naturally, as day follows night (not quoting the picture but that's the idea), Ellen and Dick fall in love, are secretly married, and Dick goes back to college without knowing that a babee is on the way, but it is, and tells! The Winfields offer Ellen money to give up the son (surprise), Ellen spurns it like the true-hearted girl she is, (second surprise) and is cast out. (It was probably snowing at the time, but the Winfield shades are drawn.)

Dick is tricked into thinking Ellen a nasty old gold-digger—there is an annulment suit; Ellen fights for her babee's reputation. And then there is, of course, only one way for it to end.

They all live happily ever after—except, we hope, the butler.

It is pretty much of a darn shame to waste Robert Taylor and Loretta Young and other self-respecting actors on this sort of hooey. Loretta looks pretty and lets her big eyes fill with tears, "overfill" at intervals. Robert looks handsome and kisses Loretta and you must admit that none of that is either hard, or of much use, to the American theater and their parts in it. They'll just have to wait awhile if they want to act. Amazingly enough, they do manage to put some little conviction and feeling into several sequences.

Rathbone Overacts.

Basil Rathbone, as the butler, does more acting than the rest of the cast put together, and we think that's too much. He has an astonishing faculty for being a bad actor at times. Even Patsy Kelly, our pal, can't help those last dismal reels.

A Walt Disney short, "Three Little Wolves," is almost as much fun as the immortal "Three Little Pigs." This time we have the Piggies back again, as fat and lovable as ever, plus three thoroughly degenerate junior wolves, the Big Bad Wolf himself, and a "wolf pacifier," a miraculous invention that quite outdoes any of those wonders Joe Cook used to hatch. The hard-working Little Pig is particularly nice this time.

The subsidiaries are more entertaining than the feature, what with the Silly Symphony! one of M-G-M's very interesting "Crime Doesn't Pay" series, introducing an attractive young actress, and more political newsreeling which lets the customers hiss and applaud until they must have only sore hands and a little breath left to last until November.

"ABDUL THE DAMNED." Columbia Pictures' release of the Alliance-Capital picturization of a story by Robert Neumann, featuring Nils Asther, Adrienne Ames and Fritz Kortner, with John Stuart, Walter Rilla, Esme Percy, Charles Carson, Alfred Woods and Patric Knowles. Directed by Karl Grune. Reviewed Friday evening by Sally Stroud.

It is too bad that Fritz Kortner must appear in this chaotic melodrama for, in a good vehicle, he would probably click again with American audiences as he has in his European pictures. To be sure, he is allowed to leer in a sinister manner, laugh without moving his lips, cast out some neat innuendo and finger a piano keyboard, but he hasn't a chance with the plot. Which has more whiskers than he.

Ostensibly, the plot tells about the overthrow of despotic Abdul Hamid II, ruler of Turkey in 1908. But Kortner (as Abdul) and Nils Asther (as Chief of Police) engage in a cigarette-smoking contest which dwarfs any other part of the picture. Neither can give an order for an execution without first lighting up; they smoke constantly. The matinee audience caught the idea and the picture was unfolded amidst wreathing clouds of smoke; everyone smoked but the children. And they, even they, snickered along with the adults at the more blunt bits of burlesque.

Unintentional burlesque, but burlesque nevertheless. Prime example: the Sultan wishes an Austrian dancer (Adrienne Ames) appearing in his city, to be hisn; and to get her in his clutches, he seizes her lover, a Turkish officer, and holds him for treason. The resultant conversation is plainly 1908 movie vintage.

White Fezzes vs. Black.

The young Turks, wearing white fezzes, battle with the old Turks, wearing black fezzes, about liberty, fraternity and equality. It appears the people were overtaxed and exploited, but since examples of the common people are not shown, one has to fill in the blank spaces with large strokes. Eventually the young Turks overthrow the ruler, mostly through the assistance and leadership of Talak Pasha (John Stuart), banished lover of the dancer, freed through her acceding to the Sultan's wishes.

So far as exciting moments are concerned, the only one in the assorted scenes occurs when the captured young Turks are backed against an execution wall and face death singing their revolutionary song exhorting the populace to "arise and end this abomination."

There is no logical sequence to the plot. From the beginning it is confused and confusing. Grand settings and fancy court trappings cannot balance the poor dialogue and absurd handling.

Kortner is potentially very good, but it is John Stuart who succeeds in impressing the audience, in spite of his vehicle, and in spite of his having a comparatively minor role. The Sultan, though, seems to have a fine time killing off his subjects, who are made to vanish at such a rapid rate one fears there will not be enough actors left to appear in the last scene.

The Auxiliaries.

Toby Wing and Hal LeRoy appear in a dance-comedy called "Rhythmitis," which suits Toby beautifully; she plays a beautifully-stupid beautiful movie star. Hal dances with his customary agility.

"Wabash Blues," trombone solo by Russ Morgan, is the only good bit in the short in which he and his orchestra appear, although Linda Lee, singing a continental ditty, would be listenable to and lookable at if she did not torture her face into the odd grimaces most singers employ in moments of melodic, emotional intensity.

Newsreel bits: W. C. T. U. youngsters at Tulsa bellow temperance songs with obvious gusto; Hollirood wins Chicago Derby; Third Party leaders tell purpose of new group; parachute jumping introduced for amusement parkgoers; Max Schmeling illustrates punch which felled Joe Louis and gives his opinion of Jimmy Braddock, without a tinge of braggadocio.

Columbia

"UNDER TWO FLAGS." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of the novel by Ouida, adapted to the screen by W. P. Lipscomb and Walter Ferris, starring Ronald Colman and Claudette Colbert, supported by Victor McLaglen, Rosalind Russell, Gregory Ratoff, Nigel Bruce, C. Henry Gordon, Herbert Mundin, John Carradine, Lumsden Hare, Fritz Leiber, William Riccardi, Frank Reicher, Francis McDonald, Nicholas Soussanin and Gaston Glass. Directed by Frank Lloyd. Reviewed (second week, repeat engagement) by W. A. Whitney.

With a dramatic sweep as vast as the mighty dune-rippled Sahara on which the climactic scenes are enacted, "Under Two Flags" unfolds a drama of heroic proportions, presenting a world-famous story performed by an equally renowned cast.

As this picture goes into its fourth down-town week, little can be added to those notices which earlier painted its sterling merits, not only as a picturized version of a famous story of the French Foreign Legion, but also as an exhibition of fine acting, with Ronald Colman, Claudette Colbert and Victor McLaglen in the pivotal roles.

The other members of the company—including the director and the entire technical staff—all contribute to the sum total of distinguished entertainment.

The auxiliary program includes "Fast Friends," another commentary on dogs; "A Tough Guy," a Terry-Toon, and a release of the Metrotone News.

RKO-Keith's

"SHOW BOAT." Universal picturization of the operetta by Oscar Hammerstein 2d, based on the novel by Edna Ferber, starring Irene Dunne, supported by Allen Jones, Paul Robeson, Helen Westley, Sammy White, Hattie McDaniel, Patricia Barry, Marilyn Knowlden, Arthur Hohl, J. Farrell MacDonald, Charles Wilson, Charles Winninger, Helen Morgan, Queenie Smith, Donald Cook, Francis X. Mahoney, Sunnie O'Dea, Charles Middleton, Clarence Muse, Mae Beatty, Harry Barris and Stanley Fields. Screen play and lyrics by Hammerstein; music by Jerome Kern. Dance numbers staged by LeRoy Prinz. Directed by James Whale.

No further commentary upon the merit of this production would seem to be necesary than the mere announcement that it now takes rank with the foremost of the long-run record-holders by entering its sixth consecutive week at KRO-Keith's.

Founded upon one of the most substantial of the modern works of romantic fiction, already adapted to the stage as an epochal music-drama and recorded in celluloid as a silent film, "Show Boat," in its latest manifestation, lends new luster to the name of Edna Ferber, the author, and places Irene Dunne in the first rank of the cinema's singing comediennes.

Supporting the star are Charles Winninger in one of his most facile performances as Capt. Andy Hawks; Helen Morgan, better than she ever has been on the screen; Allan Jones, singing superbly; Helen Westley, Queenie Smith, Sammy White and Paul Robeson, in a glorified interpretation of "Ol' Man River," which, as we have remarked on earlier occasions, places this Jerome Kern composition among the minor classics. Supplementing the work of these sterling principals are a host of others in auxiliary parts.

The production ranks with the screen's best and in every department justifies the extraordinary patronage it is being accorded.

Contract Let for Work On Armstrong School

The District Commissioners yesterday awarded to John W. Hunt, of Washington, a contract for additions and improvements to the Armstrong High School. The low bid was $69,475.

Money for the project came from the 1936 appropriation act and not the 1937 law just signed this week by the President.

Crook Yarn Is Basis of Film Comedy at Fox

Competent Cast in Runyon Play, With Donald Novis Headlining Stage.

"THREE WISE GUYS." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by Damon Runyon, with screen play by Elmer Harris, featuring Robert Young and Betty Furness, supported by Raymond Walburn, Thurston Hall, Bruce Cabot, Donald Meek, Herman Bing, Harvey Stevens and Harry Tyler. Directed by George B. Seitz. Reviewed Friday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

The innocuous imaginings by Damon Runyon concerning a couple of tender-hearted crooks, operating behind a skirt screen, comes to the silver screen as "Three Wise Guys" which just about explains the whole situation in a nutshell.

Even though Robert Young, one of the screen's better young, sophisticated playboys, marries the gal instead of being played for a sucker in a would-be $50,000 breech-of-promise suit, and even though pleasing Betty Furness is the crook's skirted "front" and has a change of heart, their combined efforts cannot raise this picture to more than a routine program production.

Nor can Raymond Walburn, Bruce Cabot and Harry Tyler, as the sophomoric titular trio, add too much interest to a story that has little of novelty. Thurston Hall, as Mr. Young's father; Donald Meek, as the secretary; Herman Bing, as the farm owner, and Harvey Stevens, as the machine shop superintendent, are adequate in their several delineations.

As an entertainment offering, "Three Wise Guys" does have its moments, so that, with the stage show, a couple of hours of relaxation may be enjoyed with no great cerebration.

Donald Novis Headlines

Heading the vaudeville would be Donald Novis, whose work from the stage and the radio are widely known. With his back to Phil Lampkin, on the ramp in front of the orchestra, he warbles "Life Is a Song," "Home on the Range," and "The Touch of Your Lips," and from the stage, as encores, offers "The Daughter of Peggy O'Neil" and "Mother Machree."

The program is opened by Virginia Bacon, accomplished dansuse, assisted by Blanche Lewis, tapstress, and the Fallen Sisters, modernistic and hot steppers. Lucille Page and Buster West appear in songs, gags and dances. Closing the program, believe it or not, are those grand Seven Danwills, acrobats, tumblers and gymnasts.

As its overture for the week, the orchestra presents a potpourri of Scottish songs, without the famed Campbells, but with almost everybody else, under Phil Lampkin's southpaw baton.

Augmenting the cinematographic portion of the bill is "Giv' 'Im Air," an amusing comedy in which Joe Cook displays, as a radio sound-effects man, a wide variety of typical Cookian gadgets. A release of the Fox Movietone News rounds out a mildly diverting summer program.

Broadway

Reviewing Stand.

New York, June 26.—The "So You Won't Talk" column stirred up the burghers of the Stem . . . The mail is jammed with Broadway feuds that I failed to list: For instance the duello of Bing Crosby and the late Russ Columbo . . . Billy Rose and Yermi Stern do not speak to this day as a result of their Casino de Paree squabbles . . . Maury Paul and Mrs. Sigourney Thayer enliven the "400" with their digs, but Maury is too fast . . . Belle Baker and Sohpie Tucker talk, but the friendship is only one orchestration deep . . . Gilda Gray and Bee Palmer broke apart over their claims to the "shimmy" dance, both claiming it . . . Meyer Davis and Joe Moss, the orchestra leaders, split up over a Rockefeller wedding, when Meyer took the bows . . . Moss quit his employ then, and since has been a rival . . . Fred Waring and Horace Heidt fell out over stage tricks, and are still out . . . I think these just about complete the directory.

BING CROSBY.

Tin Pan Notes: It is Sir Stork time along Tin Pan Alley . . . The Irving Berlin baby girl led off the Stork Parade . . . Then the long-beaked bird arrived at the Fred Warings, the Billy (Casa Loma) Rauches, and the Stuart Fletchers, Club 18 trumpeter . . . While Loretta Lee was in N'Orleans, she married Hal Berkeley, former Huey Long accountant.

The patient young lady who is my secretary, suggests the best contrib of the week . . . "Why," she asked, just now, "don't you pick four stars who represent the four seasons of the year?" . . . I thought that years of association with me had driven her daffy . . . "Ned Sparks represents winter to me," she continued . . . "Loretta Young typifies summer, Katharine Hepburn is spring and Walter Huston, autumn" . . . Tomorrow, I'm afraid that she'll tell me that Peggy Joyce is leap year.

Charlie Barnett, at Glen Island Casino, tells me that Lefty Gomez is the slickest ballroom dancer of the nonprofessionals . . . He should be . . . His wife, the former June O'Dea, was pretty good . . . Best dancer I've ever seen of the nonprofessionals is Babe Ruth . . . He still has cups that he won in exhibition waltzes while playing with Boston . . . Virginia Bruce will have the lead in the Cole Porter show on Broadway . . . She used to get $50 a week as a Ziegfeld show girl in "Smiles" . . . That was the show that starred Marilyn Miller, Fred Astaire and Adele.

* * * *

The town is still gabbing about Joe Louis . . . Not so much about the lacing he took from Schmeling, but rather about the Detroit youngster's refusal to cook up any phony alibis . . . A lot of us were afraid that Louis, stung by his first major casualty, would be goaded into the usual post-mortems . . . By preserving his silence, Louis has done more to redeem himself than he could have accomplished in any other way . . . He must be quite a boy, this unusual Michigander.

A producer was telling his director how much a rival producer claimed he liked their picture after seeing it in the projection room. "In fact," said the producer, "if we could be assured of as good acting in the picture as he did in my office we'd be certain of a hit."

More Movie Boners.

Robert Taylor and Loretta Young in the flicker, "Private Number," writes Craig Parker, are in the motorboat discussing the possibility of getting married. There are close-ups of both as they speak. When the camera is facing Loretta Young the boat is in motion, as indicated by the water rushing past at a fair rate of speed. When the camera is facing Robert Taylor the boat seems to be standing still. "As a former sailor," says Parker, "the way they start up that boat and then stop it is really a feat." The scenery that is seen is really on a transparency screen; that is, the background is on a screen and Robert Taylor and Loretta Young stand on the boat in front of this screen and do their emoting. This is how the great feat with the boat is accomplished.

* * * *

In the sequence in the flicker, "Show Boat," in which Allan Jones is singing about "The Room Upstairs," to Irene Dunne, Allan's window is circled by a shadow from a lamp post. In the next flash, a close-up of Allan, the shadow is not in the picture, insists Jesse Sierra. "And," says Jesse, "Jones was not singing 'Chasing Shadows.'"

* * * *

Elinora Gafinkle writes: "Your column has done something to me. It has enabled me to view a movie and be totally unaware of the story and the acting and the direction in my eager search for movie boners. And since I don't pay any attention to the picture itself I find that I enjoy it."

* * * *

The Max Schmeling-Joe Louis fight picture is exciting and a great job of photography. The fight itself couldn't have been clearer and punches more evident if the fighters had been actors and posed for the camera in a studio ring. However, there are many movie boners in it, for as Jane Leighton says, Joe Louis made a boner in every round.

5 in Black Legion Admit Arson Guilt

Detroit, June 26 (AP).—Arson was admitted today at Pontiac by five men, first whose guilt has been established in court since the investigation of Black Legion terrorism in Michigan began a month ago.

Another development in the drive against the secret society here was the dismissal of three Detroit policemen and 11 employes of the Detroit Street Railway, a municipal utility, and the suspension of 14 other street railway workers on suspicion of Black Legion memberships.

The five men pleaded guilty before Circuit Court Judge George B. Hartrick to burning the "Workers Educational Association" camp near here in 1933. They were James E. Bader, 51; his son, George, 23; Randall Wilson, 28; Gordon Smith, 23, all of Pontiac, and Harry P. Davis, of Flint, Mich.

Investigators charged the camp was destroyed by Black Legion members who believed communistic doctrines were being taught there.

Long Island Thieves Foiled by Mrs. Mackay

Garden City, N. Y., June 16 (AP).—Another attempted gem robbery on Long Island's "gold coast" came to light today when Mrs. Clarence Mackay, the former Anna Case, opera star, told police a thief had pried the lid from her jewel box.

Mrs. Mackay, who owns a valuable jewel collection, told Inspector Harold R. King, of Mineola, she outwitted the invader by locking her jewels in a closet, leaving only the empty case in her dresser. The entry of the Mackay home was the fourth burglary reported on Long Island's "gold coast" within a week, the largest being the $400,000 jewel theft Wednesday at the William Robertson Coe estate at Upper Brookville.

Farley Spurns Comment On Leaving Cabinet

Philadelphia, June 26 (AP).—The question, "Will you resign as Postmaster General and, if so, when?" was asked again today at Democratic Chairman James A. Farley's press conference.

He gave the oft-repeated reply, "No comment."

Age Pension List Doubles in Month

The list of persons to receive monthly old-age pension checks will have more than doubled at the end of this month, Elwood Street, director of public welfare, said yesterday.

The number, beginning July 1, will be approximately 500, he added, whereas the roll at the end of May was only 236.

Some 3,200 applications for the pension are on file, and about 1,000 cases are expected to be transferred from the group of unemployables on direct relief to the old-age security list.

Pensions average about $30 a month, half of which is furnished by the Federal Government.

Indians Win On Vosmik's Home Run

Red Sox Beaten, 8-7, in 10th and Drop Six Games Behind.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, June 26.—Joe Vosmik broke up a free-hitting, ding-dong ball game in the tenth inning today, smashing a home run over the wall in right centerfield to give the Indians an 8-to-7 win over the Boston Red Sox.

The defeat for the second-place Sox sank them six full games back of the league-leading New York Yankees, who were idle today.

Although Vosmik's was the only homer, both clubs collected a total of 24 hits, with the Indians holding the edge, 13 to 11.

The Sox took an early lead, but found it wiped away by a three-run Tribe assault in the sixth. This edge, in turn, was erased when the million-dollar outfit from Boston put together two hits for as many runs to tie it up in the ninth.

The Sox stepped out in front in the first inning, collecting two runs on doubles by Doc Cramer and Jimmy Foxx, and Joe Cronin's single. They added three more in the third on two-baggers by Mel Almada and Cramer, Bing Miller's sacrifice, three straight walks, and Eric McNair's long fly. Miller's two-run single wound up the Sox efforts in the ninth.

Knickerbocker, Averill Aid.

The Indians' first runs were accounted for by doubles by Bill Knickerbocker and Earl Averill in the third, sending two runs in. Knickerbocker's single sent in Vosmik in the fifth, and three hits for as many runs greeted Grove's arrival on the mound for Boston in the sixth. Rick Ferrell's wild peg to second, together with Averill's two-bagger, brought in another tally in the seventh, which wound up the Cleveland scoring until the tenth.

British Open Hopes Fade For U. S.

By the Associated Press.

Hoylake, England, June 26.—America's chances of doing anything drastic about winning the British Open Golf championship slumped almost to the vanishing point today as Gene Sarazen explored Hoylake's traps and knee-high rough like a big game hunter and left himself four shots behind two pace-setting natives.

While Farmer Gene, followed by his usual adoring gallery, treated himself to an adventurous 75 in the second round to wind up at the halfway mark with a total of 148, Bill Cox, Wimbledon professional, and Jim Adams, recently crowned Scottish open champion, paced the field with totals of 144.

Cox, the first day's leader, canned a long putt on the last green for a birdie to square things with Adams, who was in second place yesterday with a 71 and added a 73 today. That putt gave Cox a par 74.

Five On Necks.

Breathing right on their necks were five formidable players, including Henry Cotton, the favorite, and Alf Padgham, Britain's most consistent money winner last year, both of whom had 72s today. Padgham looked smooth and consistent as he toured the windy links with the Pine Valley (N. J.) pro, Ted Turner, who finished only one stroke back of Sarazen after a grand finish which gave him a 74.

In the 145 bracket was Francis Francis, millionaire British amateur, who was forced to retire from the swanky guards regiment a few years ago because he married Sunny Jarman, a musical comedy star.

In the same bracket were Marcel Dallemagne, the French native professional champion, and Dick Burton, British Ryder Cup Team member, who had a great chance to take the lead today. Burton played the first nine holes in 33, the lowest total of the tournament, but just as he was hitting his ball from the tenth tee, an ice cream vendor yelled and Burton topped his drive. He had trouble with par from then on and finished with a 71.

Ernie Ball, Mobile, Ala., was posted at 151 with two others, and Willie Goggin, San Francisco, at 152. Both were beaten by Hoylake's long back nine today, and while they qualified it looked as if they had too much ground to make up on the final 36 holes tomorrow. They both went out in 38 today, but Ball took 39 strokes coming home and Goggin 40.

The other American in the field, Joe Ezar, the wild Texan, shot himself out of the championship, but not before he and his gallery had a lot of fun. He went out in 41, and then, realizing that he could not qualify, obliged the gallery by doing trick shots on the back nine. At that, he finished with a 39, which gave him an 80 and a total of 162.

Percy Alliss, the British pro who plays from Berlin, was in an ideal position, bracketed with two other players at 146, two shots back of the leaders. With him were Bert Gadd, who shared the lead in the first qualifying round, and Tom Green, who shot a fine 72 today.

Tom Collinge, who last week lost the Scottish open championship to Adams in a play-off, and Norman Sutton, another British professional, were in the 147 slot.

$10,000 Race Objective of Discovery

By Orlo Robertson.
By the Associated Press.

New York, June 26.—Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's great handicap horse, Discovery, bids for his third successive victory in the $10,000 added Brooklyn tomorrow at Aqueduct when under the crushing weight of 136 pounds he tangles with five other high-class thoroughbreds, two of them his stablemates.

Winner of the race two years ago under 113 pounds, and last year with 123 in the saddle, the big 5-year-old chestnut is strongly favored to chalk up his second straight win since trailing in the Santa Anita Handicap despite the presence of Elwood Sachsenmaier's Roman Soldier.

A year ago, Discovery started a string of eight victories in a row by of 1:48 1-5 for the mile and an in what was then world record time defeating King Saxon and Omaha eighth. Since then, however, the mark has been lowered to 1:47 3-5 by the 3-year-old, Indian Broom.

Although Discovery probably would rule the favorite alone, he will have the swift-breaking Good Harvest and Good Gamble as running companions. They get in with 112 and 100 pounds, respectively. In the prerace calculations, the triple entry was quoted at 2 to 5.

Roman Soldier, assessed 126 pounds, figures to be the horse Discovery will have to beat. The Sachsenmaier 4-year-old has raced consistently over New England tracks this year after a successful campaign among the 3-year-olds last year.

A. A. Baroni's Ann O'Ruley and William Woodward's Palma, both outsiders, complete the field.

Ben Chapman Only Nat Picked in All-Star Poll

By the United Press.

Boston, June 26.—The "peepul's choice" of players for the fourth annual all-star major league game at National League Field here July 7 was announced tonight.

Technically, Mr. and Mrs. Gus H. Fan had the privilege of selecting 16 players from each league in a Nation-wide poll. But the balloting public muffed the opportunity by failing to conform to the edict that every club in each circuit be represented in the midsummer classic by at least one player. The result was that four of their choices were dropped.

By Monday the squad of 21 players from each league will be completed when Manager Charlie Grimm, of the Chicago Cubs, pilot of the National Leaguers, names his five choices and Manager Joe McCarthy, of the New York Yankees, does likewise. McCarthy is pinch hitting as boss of the American Leaguers for the incapacitated Manager Mckey Cochrane, of the world champion Detroit Tigers.

Fan selections were announced as follows:

Cubs Win, 3 to 1, Drop Giants To Fourth

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 26.—The Chicago Cubs remained right on the tail of the National League lead today, and clubbed the Giants back into fourth place by pulling out a 3-to-1 victory on the strength of Curt Davis' six-hit pitching.

With the Pittsburgh Pirates winning in Boston and the Giants unable to get anywhere against Davis, except for Mark Koenig's pinch homer in the eighth, the New Yorkers found themselves back at the end of the first division after a stay of only a day in third place.

The win was Davis' seventh of the season and his fifth since he was traded to the Cubs by the Phillies. It kept the Cubs just a few percentage points back of the St. Louis Cardinals, who held onto the lead by taking their game today.

Davis had his hands full for most of the game in a pitching struggle with Hal Schumacher, who gave up a run in the fifth and two more in the sixth for his fifth defeat against eight victories.

Bill Jurges' single, Davis' sacrifice, and Stan Hack's hit brought in the Cubs' first run in the fifth. They proceeded to put the battle on ice with a three-hit attack in the next frame, when doubles by Gabby Hartnett and Frank Demaree, a walk to Rookie Johnny Gill and Jurges' single pushed two runs over.

Unhealed Wrist Delays Return of Greenberg

Detroit, June 26 (AP).—Hank Greenberg's return to the lineup of the Detroit Tigers was postponed indefinitely today. The big first baseman, whose left wrist was fractured April 29 in a game at Washington, had expected to be able to play by July 10, but when the cast was removed today his physicians found that the wrist had not healed sufficiently, and a new cast was ordered.

Greenberg's wrist, which apparently had not fully recovered from the fracture which kept him out of the final games of the world series last fall, was broken in two places when he collided with Jake Powell, centerfielder, in the Washington game.

Romano Died of Natural Causes, Autopsy of Coroner Discloses

Mike Romano, the wrestler, who died in a bout with Jack Donovan at Griffith Stadium last Thursday night, succumbed from natural causes an autopsy performed by Dr. Christopher J. Murphy, deputy coroner, disclosed yesterday.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate stating the heavyweight wrestling veteran had died "from coronary occlusion and chronic disease of muscles of the heart, liver, spleen and kidney."

Donovan, who had been held in the custody of Detective Sergeant Walter Beck pending the coroner's report, was released immediately and left for Richmond, where he wrestled last night. There will be no inquest.

Romano failed to rise from the mat after being thrown by Donovan in 13½ minutes of a bout scheduled for 30 minutes. When it became apparent that his condition was serious, physicians were sent for and they worked futilely over him until he was taken to Freedman's Hospital, where he was officially pronounced dead.

Coroner MacDonald said Romano's heart ailment was not acute, but of long standing, gradually making inroads on his physical condition until he succumbed easily in the Donovan match."

Romano died almost two weeks to the day after Steve Zenoski was fatally stricken in a match with him in New York City. In that fatal bout, Romano noticed Zenoski was ill and asked that the bout be stopped.

The contest was halted and Zenoski died two days later from spinal meningitis.

In respect to the memory of Romano, who was one of the first big favorites in big-time wrestling here, Promoter Joe Turner, who staged last Thursday's card, will not operate a progra mof grappling next Thursday night. The regular shows will be resumed one week from that night.

Nats, White Sox Will Play Two Tilts Today

Whitehill, DeShong Face Rivals as Pitching Shortage Looms.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

Chicago, June 26.—Their three-game winning streak still intact as a result of a washout at Comiskey Field today, the third-place Nats are now confronted with a pair of double-headers against the White Sox in two days.

The double-barreled proceedings threaten Manager Bucky Harris with a pitching shortage, but the White Sox are no less handicapped by a paucity of capable pitchers.

For tomorrow's twin efforts, Harris will send Earl Whitehill and Jimmy DeShong to the mound against the Sox. Manager Jimmy Dykes is expected to counter with John Whitehead and Monte Stratton.

Newsom on Sunday.

Harris will have Buck Newsom available for one of the Sunday games, but no other regular hurler with sufficient rest is at his disposal. Currently he is debating whether to start the unreliable Monte Weaver or draft Syd Cohen for service. Cohen, the recently acquired left-hander from Chattanooga, has been impressive in his warm-up outings.

The White Sox, more than any other club, have proved a stumbling block to the Nats. In seven engagements between the two teams this season the Sox have won five. Washington has yet to win a 1936 game at Comiskey Park.

Harris' revamped batting order has paid handsome dividends during the past week. The shift that placed Joe Kuhel in third place in the line-up and dropped Cecil Travis to fifth has capitalized both on Kuhel's superior speed on the bases and his run-producing talents.

Ben Chapman's penchant for getting on base has set the stage for Kuhel's frequent blows.

Travis Improved.

Travis, now a fixture in right-field for the Nats, is not only a vastly improved outfielder, but his throwing arm rounds out a set of defensive weapons that probably gives the Nats the best throwing arms among all outfields in the league.

Johnny Stone formerly was recognized as the strongest and most accurate thrower among the Nats' outfielders, but Travis' arm is regarded now as even better, despite the fear that he might not be able to adjust his throws to outfield duty. However, the arms of both Travis and Stone pale before that of Chapman.

Chapman commands the deepest respect of all base runners and only yesterday might have thrown out three St. Louis runners had his throws not taken bad hops. He has been throwing strikes to all the bases from deep centerfield.

19-Year-Old Girl Plays Miss Miley

Miss Barrett Reaches Trans-Miss. Golf Final.

By the Associated Press.

Denver, June 26.—A 19-year-old Minneapolis girl, Miss Beatrice Barrett, won the right today to meet Miss Marion Miley, the 1935 title-holder from Lexington, Ky., in the 36-hole final of the women's trans-Mississippi golf tournament here tomorrow.

Miss Barrett, who attracted the gallery attention yesterday by whipping Miss Patty Berg, another Minneapolis lass and the pre-tourney favorite, gained the final round today with a 2-and-1 victory over Mrs. Dan Chandler, of Dallas.

Meanwhile Miss Miley gained the title round and the opportunity for a second straight championship. She was forced to an extra hole to defeat Mrs. R. D. Roper, Arizona State champion from Phoenix, 1 up.

Peacock Out In Maryland Golf Play

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., June 26.—This was upset day in the Maryland amateur golf championship at Hillendale with young Nathan Kaufman, of Suburban, and Russ Hollebaugh, a golf salesman, of Washington, assuming giant-killer roles.

Reeling off four birdies on the back nine, Kaufman defeated Roger Peacock, of Washington, titleholder in 1934 and 1935, in a 19-hole match in the quarter-final round.

The other two survivors in this afternoon's semifinal rounds are Spencer Overton, the medalist from Rolling Road, who defeated Hickman Green, of Manor, 2 and 1, and John Mackenzie, of the host club. Mackenzie defeated Harry Root, of the Public Links forces, 3 and 2.

Peacock Yields Lead.

Hollebaugh played Mackenzie and Kaufman met Overton in this afternoon's matches.

Peacock had a lead of 4 up over Kaufman going to the twelfth hole. However, the Suburban player got down medium-sized putts for birdies at the twelfth, thirteenth, sixteenth and eighteenth holes, his 3 at the eighteenth green evening up the match.

Both Peacock and Kaufman found traps with their approaches at the nineteenth, but Kaufman had the better explosion shots and got down with one putt for a 4 to win the hole and match.

Hollebaugh Takes Lead.

Hollebaugh won the first three holes from Caldwell, getting birdies at the first and third, and the defending champion was never able to cut very much into his lead.

Two down rounding the turn, Caldwell won the tenth with a par 4. However, Hollebaugh got this hole back at the short twelfth with a birdie 2 and sank a sizable putt for another birdie at the nineteenth to become 3 up.

After they halved the fourteenth with 5, Caldwell braced and won the next two holes to be only 1 down, but Hollebaugh held him safe on the last two to preserve his advantage.

Mackenzie got an early lead over Root and was never headed.

Overton, although he was extended, played altogether too steady golf for Green.

Overton will meet Hollebaugh in the finals tomorrow.

Skyride, Palumbo Up, Captures Feature Race at Charles Town

$156 Mutuel Is Returned On Double

Penang Wins Nose Finish From Egeon in 6th to Pay $12.

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., June 26.—The Shirley Povich Purse, named for The Post's sports editor, proved a hop, skip and a few jumps for Skyride, a 3-year-old daughter of Happy Argo. Sammy Palumbo was in her saddle and took the shortest way to the all-important finish line, to the satisfaction of the favorite players, who completed $6.40 mutuel.

Gay Bride did a lot of huffing and puffing but wound up in second place, a length and a half behind the winner. Truthfully came with a stretch rush to be third in the field of seven.

Skyride, breaking on the rail, did not get any the best of the get-a-way, but Palumbo did not waste time getting the filly to the front. Once in the clear, Palumbo hugged the rail and threw his arms and the filly held sway to end Jockey Tryon was trying Gay Bride but she lacked the necessary final punch.

Ideal racing weather prevailed. The track had returned to the fast stage. A crowd of 4,000 was on hand.

The possible pay-off board on the daily double resembled a list of Chevy Chase income taxes after Lady Buck had won the second race at a $23.20 mutuel. The winning combination was that ending with Hogarty, the $9.60 winner of the third race. Those who had the 7-4 ticket collected $156.40.

The nearest thing to a dead heat at the meeting came in the sixth race. Penang and Egeon fought a nose-and-nose stretch duel that the judges had to decide. They called Penang the winner. Those who bet Penang applauded, while those who played Egeon booed. The Egeon backers were still booing when the Penang betters were lining up to collect a $12 mutuel.

DOREEN wrested the lead from FRED ALVA going to the first turn, opened a long lead thereafter while saving ground and easily held sway to the end. BLIND TALK had a rough trip to the backstretch, but gained steadily for the remainder. FRED ALVA was poorly ridden throughout and can do better. CHAMBERSBURGER pressed the pace along the backstretch and tired suddenly. GAY LASS stumbled on the backstretch, was pulled up, and rallied sharply in the late stretch. GOLD TOKEN had early speed.

LADY BUCK, outrun to the stretch turn, came through on the rail to save much ground and withstood a drive to stave off closing rush of NAY NAY. The latter, forwardly placed from the start, came around horses entering the stretch, but lugged in from whip in final sixteenth. NORAS GRACE pressed the pace of SLEIVES PRIDE, but faltered slightly. SLEIVES PRIDE was used up through hustling tactics while in front. WALTZ KING closed well from a slow beginning. EASTER HERALD had no excuses.

HOGARTY, off in the first flight, came up on the outside to take a slight lead swinging for the stretch and held ROCK SPRAY safe in the final drive. JUNE G. came courageously at the end. FALMOUTH BELLE faltered after being a keen factor along the rail to the stretch turn. MISS NOBBY was going well at the finish. SHAGGY ANN was caught between FALMOUTH BELLE and HOGARTY entering the stretch and had to be pulled up.

DAILY DOUBLE PAID $156.40.

CANTERET, well ridden, was eased back off the early pace of TWENTY THREE, forged to the front entering the stretch, but had to be vigorously ridden to stave off closing rush of WARNED OFF. The latter was outrun to the stretch turn, which and a rush and was wearing the winner down. LUCID, close up from the start, rallied sharply in the closing sixteenth. WRACKESS was going well at the end. CUSTOMER closed gamely. TWENTY THREE quit badly.

SKY RIDE came up on the rail to take command in the opening furlong, saved ground at the turns, and held GAY BRIDE safe under energetic handling. The latter, always a forward factor, was hard ridden all the way and showed an excellent effort. TRUTHFULLY was forced to race on the outside and closed gamely. DARLING PAT was in close quarters going to the far turn and showed an even effort. NAHALLAC closed well.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:04. Off at 5:06½. Winner, R. V. PENANG, steadied along when outrun for a half, began bettering position on the outside, took a slight lead on EGEON entering the stretch and was ridden out at the end. EGEON, closest to the pace of TELL IT, fought it out willingly through the stretch and just missed. MISS CATALAN, under restraint until turning for home, came on with a belated rush and was going fastest at the end. TELL IT tired after opening a long lead. COVENTRY QUEEN was slightly bumped by MISS CATALAN when moving up in the stretch.

TIME OUT!

"Nix, O'Malley, quit shooting that gun! I can hardly hear the announcer—an' the Nats got the bases full!"

At the Post . . .

Charles Town, June 26.

Dear Al: Well we finally put one over. I mean on the local beer situation. Starting today, the State tax of 1 cent will be absorbed by the concessionaire. Sometime back I kidded about the pesky pennies that the counter man skidded across the wet counter. I advocated that the track knock off the State tax. Now the price has been changed to even money. But I have yet to see a free pretzel. However, we can't have everything. Speaking of close finishes, this track almost had a dead heat today. In fact, the men who manipulate the results board had the sign ready to go in the slot before the judges signaled that Penang had defeated Egeon. Jockey Vernon Wisner returns to action tomorrow after visiting the dentist. Beaverly Broun, chairman of the West Virginia Racing Commission, will arrive here tomorrow to stay for the remainder of the meeting. The Fairfax Purse is the feature race here tomorrow. Eight aces are scheduled and the track hopes to play host to a crowd of 8,000. BILL.

First race—White Sweets, an easy winner here in good time, figures to pick up top weight and win in this company. Cingalese's first effort here was a smashing one. Next out this one failed. A shift in riders or better handling would account for a large part of the purse. The entry of Justa Town and Justa Jimmie should get part of the pay-off.

Second race—Dinah's Finish would have won at the first asking here but foç running out. If this one takes the shortest way home tomorrow, I believe the others will be chasing. Povel and Flying Carpet are fit and at home at the route and will be ready if the top one makes mistakes.

Third race—Aella seems to have a slight edge on the horses that fit to the chief running here. Dr. Jillson has early speed when he breaks well and may defeat the top one if the mud comes up. Blonde Bagage is dangerous.

Fourth race—Silvery Cloud needs two scratches before seeing action here, but is much the best. Cerro and Wise Money figure to battle it out if Silvery Cloud stays in the stall. Scotty Don is a possible surprise.

Fifth race—Genie Palatine, in light, appears to be the best bet of the day. This one will have Scudder as a chief rival. Flosilda is fit and ready. Famous Clayton may go well with the proper handling.

Sixth race—Hot Cake, on a fast track, would have better than an outside chance with these. This veteran is being groomed for a killing and tomorrow may be the day. Jobakheta has done about everything asked hereabouts and is the one to beat. Luculent comes off a sprint and is dangerous.

Seventh race—Post Brigade seems to have found a spot where he should show to advantage. Lady Glasgow is better than that last. Vennie H., with a change of riders, could figure if sent postward.

Eighth race—Keswick would romp home in this company, but is far down the also eligible list. Little Hurd has been threatening of late. Golden Sandals for the remainder.

Best bet—Silvery Cloud.

2—Channing, Povel, Flying Carpet.
3—Marze, Blonde Baggage, Aella.
4—Scotty Don, Silvery Cloud, Cerro.
5—Scudder, Genie Palatine, Postponement.
6—Kepi, Luculent, Jobakheta.
7—Skimalong, Post Brigade, Staked Plains.
8—Golden Sandals, Little Hurd, Gold Streak.

Best bet—Channing.

D. C. Tennis Championships to Open Today With 108 Entries

Welsh Again Favored in Tourney

Columbia Club Courts Scene; Mitchell Is Seeded No. 2.

By John R. Vosburgh.

A small army of 107 optimists and Barney Welsh open play today at Columbia Country Club in the 1936 edition of the District of Columbia men's tennis championships for the title now held by Mr. Welsh, the Rockville rambler.

Barney, the lanky law student from George Washington, is engaged at present in the Middle States grass courts championships in Pittsburgh, but drew a bye for the first round. He will see his first action tomorrow with H. Clay Thompson as the opposition.

The largest entry list any tournament in or around Washington has received in many years greeted the announcement of event this year. Harry Howlett, club professional, was swamped by 57 phone calls and mail entries yesterday as the aspiringing racquet swingers got in their last-minute bids to become perspiring racquet swingers.

Out-of-Town Entries.

Tournament officials said that the number of out-of-town entries exceeded all previous records for the classic. Despite the fast field of visiting participants, Welsh is still a 3-to-1 choice to win the championship for the third straight year.

The foremost threat in his path happens to be young Sterling Williams, of Austin, Tex., who has seen service on the American Davis Cup team in action against Mexico. Williams is seeded No. 1 in the out-of-town list. Six of the outstanding Baltimore players are entered, headed by Price Colvin, No. 4 ranking player of the Middle Atlantic Lawn Tennis Association.

Welsh heads the seeded list for Washington players, with Dooley Mitchell, seeded No. 2. The others on the roll of honor include Hugh Lynch, former Princeton tennis captain; Tony Latona, Tom Markey, former Notre Dame tennis captain; Ralph McElvenny, former National Intercollegiate doubles champion at Stanford; Tom Mangan, former District champion, and Frank Shore, University of North Carolina star.

The visiting seeded players following Williams in order are Colvin, Frank Goeltz, Baltimore; Lieut. R. C. McCue, Annapolis; Paul Pollard, Lynchburg, Va.; Alex Keiles, Baltimore; Ed Greipenkirl, Baltimore, and Jack Talbot, Staten Island, N. Y.

In outstanding matches today, Williams plays Mariana Erana, Philipine star; Lynch meets Commander Redgrave of the Navy; Mitchell faces Ralph Ellis and Latona, Austin Rice. Frank Shore, who drew a bye for the first line, must meet Pat Deck, local public parks star, in the second round.

Cleveland Scene Of Polo Battles

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 26.—The United States Polo Association today announced the award of the national inter-circuit championship to the Hunting Valley Country Club in Cleveland August 15-30.

The 1936 championship will mark the revival of the tournament after a lapse of several years. Thomas H. White, of the Cleveland club, is chairman of the committee in charge of the arrangements.

The tournament is for teams whose handicap does not exceed 12 goals. No player with a higher handicap than six goals shall be eligible to compete except where raised between winning an intra-circuit tournament and the opening of the championship.

Winners of intra-circuit tournaments will qualify for the national tournament. The association's circuits include Eastern, Southeastern, New England, Southern, Central, Rocky Mountain, Southwestern, Pacific Coast and Hawaiian.

The Eastern, Southeastern, New England, Southwestern and Central circuits are expected to be represented in the championship, and there is a possibility that the Pacific Coast also will send a team.

Chapman Only Nat Picked In Voting

Pearson, New York; Schoolboy Rowe, Detroit.

Catchers—Mickey Cochrane, Detroit; Bill Dickey, New York; Rollie Hemsley, St. Louis.

Though Cochrane will be unable to play, President Will Harridge, of the American League, decreed him official No. 1 backstop because of contests conducted in connection with the fan voting.

Two switches were necessary In the American League when the St. Louis Downs and the Philadelphia Athletics failed to qualify men, so Manager Jimmy Dykes, of the White Sox, was replaced by Higgins, and Hemsley was named to fill Cochrane's catching berth.

Nearly two million votes were cast by fans from 42 States and Canada. All told, 293 players received one or more votes with Dizzy Dean pacing the field. The great one pulled down 41,900 votes. He was followed by Charlie Gehringer with 41,753; Gabby Hartnett, with 41,385, and Lefty Grove, with 40,640.

The Yanks held a monopoly on selections in the American League, placing six men. In the National circuit the Giants and Cubs led with four each.

Alexandria Police Nine Meets Terminal Icemen

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, June 26.—Alexandria's Police nine, who have earned an even break in two games this week, will attempt to better their record against the Terminal Ice Co. nine, of Washington. The contest will be played at Baggett's Stadium, and is scheduled to start at 3 o'clock.

The Blues, vastly improved since they dropped their inaugural game to the Washington Police, will be in quest of their fifth victory of the season.

Elite Giants to Play Homestead Club Here

The league-leading Washington Elite Giants will clash this afternoon at 2 o'clock at Griffith Stadium in a double bill with Cumberland Posey's Homestead Grays, a fast-stepping team which will attempt to stop the Elites' forward march. The Homesteads will have in their line-up "Jelly" Jackson, "Rap" Dixon, the veteran fly-chaser, and "Pepper" Barrett, styled the only one-handed catcher in baseball. Another game will be played at the stadium tomorrow to conclude a decisive series.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Chicago, June 26.

It may be a slight giddiness produced by their success in the West, or it may be an honest belief that they are destined for loftier places, but the fact remains that the Nats are beginning to take themselves seriously as pennant contenders.

If that's a silly notion, they won't be long in ascertaining the silliness of it. The Yankees at this writing are nine and one-half games in front and it behooves the Nats to make speedy progress pronto or forget their pennant ambitions. But it's a compliment at least to the team's morale that they are entertaining such ideas.

POVICH.

But it's a fact. With six victories to show for their nine efforts in the West on the current excursion, the Nats are, as we say on the sandlots, considerably pepped up. A team that was counted out of the first division now finds itself in third place, only three and one-half games out of second, and thus the possibilities are intriguing.

Yesterday's game is usually forgotten by a ball club that isn't going anywhere in the pennant race, but the Nats are showing at least one trace of ambition. They are cursing themselves roundly for dropping those three straight to Cleveland last week in the realization that even one victory in that series would have improved their position mightily.

Even Manager Bucky Harris, a veteran pennant campaigner with an excellent sense of the values of a nine and one-half game lead, is permitting himself to toy with the possibilities of a Washington surge toward the top. Encouraged by the Nats' triumphs in the West, Harris is happy to see his hands play with pennant ideas and himself affects one of those "You never can tell" expressions when asked bluntly about the Nats' chances.

That the Nats are destined for better things in the pennant race is a universal feeling on the ball club. They have learned to regard themselves as good or better than the Tigers, Indians and White Sox, and are thoroughly suspicious of the Red Sox's claims to a higher rating. The Yanks, they agree, are a swell ball club that has been lucky to escape a slump. But the Yankees' pitching, they are inclined to believe, is no guarantee that they will win the pennant.

The man perhaps responsible more than any other individual for the new-found ambitions of the Nats is Ben Chapman, the former Yankee now performing in their midst. Chapman's first act on joining the Washington club was to declare that the team could win the pennant and from that first day he has set a shining example by his individual play of how it could be won.

This Chapman has infected the entire team with a winning spirit. He's a winning ball player, personally, although he frankly admits that with the Yanks his ambitions were dulled by a personal dislike for Yankee officials.

It may be in the spirit of revenge against the Yankees, or purely personal satisfaction in proving Manager Joe McCarthy a bum as a trader, that Chapman has set about to play the game of his life for Washington, but the fellow is carrying the torch of competition for the Nats like no other individual has toted it.

By Chapman's presence on the team the other Washington players have been fired to new zeal. With Chapman out in center field terrifying base runners with his rifle arm, hauling down all kinds of hits, and instilling panic in enemy pitchers by his base running, the Nats have been presented with new opportunities and have been capitalizing on 'em.

Such fellows as Johnny Stone, Joe Kuhel, Cecil Travis and Cliff Bolton, whose individual fire and dash heretofore has been nil, null and void, have been almost magically transformed. With new-found fervor they are throwing their native talents into the ball games and battling for victories from the first pitched ball. Manager Bucky Harris finds himself with a fighting ball club now in third place.

Not even the Yankees' greatest admirers expect the New York club to continue at their .672 pace. That is too strenuous a task, especially with the Yankees' pitching sadly deficient. Washington's own pitching has shown definite signs of improvement and with more than half the season still in the future even a nine and one-half game deficit is not too great to overcome. That's painting a pretty picture of the Nats' chances, but the Nats now are in the mood to entertain pleasing visions.

Goodman in Semifinal Of Trans-Mississippi

Wichita, Kans., June 26 (AP).—The battle for the trans-Mississippi golf-championship tonight was a four-cornered affair between defending Champion Johnny Goodman, of Omaha; dark-horse George Watson, of Wichita; nonchalant Walter Emery, and veteran Johnny Dawson, of Chicago. Performances in the quarter-finals today left little choice as to a favorite.

Each survivor advanced to the semifinals virtually under wraps. Goodman defeated Fred Dold, of Wichita, 6 and 4; Matson crushed a favorite, Jack Munger, of Dallas, 9 and 8; Emery won over O'Hara Watts, of Dallas, 6 and 5, and Dawson eliminated Maurice Hankinson, of Oklahoma City, by the same score.

Max Schmeling Welcomed to Homeland

Greeted by Nazi Officials; Promoter Bidding for Title Bout.

By the Associated Press.

Frankfurt-on-Main, Germany, June 26.—Deafening cheers greeted Max Schmeling, former heavyweight champion and knockout conquerer of Joe Louis, tonight when he arrived in the Zeppelin Hindenburg at the Airdome.

Schmeling was welcomed by Nazi and city representatives amidst the tumultuous shouts of thousands of spectators. He was met by his actress wife, Anny Ondra, and the pair was taken to the City Hall for an official reception.

As Schmeling was reaching his native shores, the first definite steps to bring the proposed bout between him and Heavyweight Champion Jimmy Braddock to this country were taken. Walter Rothenburg, German sports promoter, offered Mike Jacobs, the New York promoter, $150,000 for the contract for the proposed title contest.

Rothenburg, promoter of the Schmeling-Steve Hamas fight last year, said he intends to stage the title bout in Berlin in the Olympic Stadium after the international sports carnival August 1-16.

"Jacobs will do better business transferring the world's heavyweight championship fight to Germany and accepting a flat sum as his share in the deal," declared Rothenburg.

Although officials and Rothenburg declined to admit it, German government officials generally were believed to be backing the plan to stage the bout.

New York, June 26 (AP).—Mike Jacobs today gave a cold shoulder to Walter Rothenburg's offer of $150,000 to buy the contract for the proposed Jim Braddock-Max Schmeling heavyweight boxing championship bout.

"Apparently Rothenburg doesn't understand the situation in this country," said Jacobs. "I have Schmeling under contract and Braddock is the property of Madison Square Garden.

"I'll gladly pay the Garden $150,000 for Braddock's contract, or I'll sell Schmeling's to the Garden for the same price. If the Garden accepts my offer I'll promote the fight in this country.

"It's a cinch that the fight will be held in the United States, regardless of who promotes it."

American Security Wins Over City, 14-2

9 D.C. Paddlers Seek Olympic Positions

Knight Leads Capital's Group in Competition at Philadelphia.

All set to make their bid today and tomorrow for the Olympic team, nine crack canoeists of the Washington Canoe Club left yesterday for Philadelphia for the final Olympic canoeing tryouts. Led by 49-year-old Harry Knight, veteran of the 1924 Olympics, the Washington squad will compete in three 10,000-meter races and four 1,000-meter sprints.

The Capital representatives stand a fine chance of getting at least four men on the American team. The latter will number no more than a dozen paddlers. The local contingent, besides Knight, comprised Johnny Long, his tandem partner; Ebby Trilling, Dusty Rhodes, Herman Vollmer, Dick Ackad, George Shorb, Russ Swann and Bill Havens, jr.

Knight and Long are the team to beat in the 10,000-meter tandem double-blade race and also stand as a serious threat in the 1,000-meter event. Ebby Trilling, broad-shouldered individual artist, is a hot choice to take the one-man single-blade test and Bill Havens, jr., stands at the top of the field in the one-man double-blade race.

The 10,000-meter races (6.2) miles will be run off today and the 1,000-meters (⅝ of a mile), tomorrow.

Variety of Crews.

Crews competing in addition to the Washington Club will be Pendleton Canoe Club of New York, the Yonkers (N. Y.) Canoe Club, Red Dragon Canoe Club, New York; Cacawa Canoe Club, Tacony, Pa.; Somerset Canoe Club, Philadelphia Canoe Club and Yapwii Canoe Club of New Jersey.

Entrants will qualify for the Olympic team by finishing either first or second.

Officials of the American Canoeing Association are particularly apprehensive about the Berlin assignment and the final trials will do much to give some kind of a line on America's chances. Germany stands as the big threat for the international championship and American paddlers are in no mood to do a Joe Louis for the benefit of the Teutons.

Washington's canoeists gave ample evidence of their determined drive for international supremacy recently by placing 12 of the 21 men on the qualifying list allotted the Middle States Association for the final trials.

Bank Interest To Remain Low, Col. Ayres Says

Held Down by Big Reserves and Slow Turnover, He Tells Bankers.

New Brunswick, N. J., June 26.—The present outlook is for continued low rates of bank interest, Col. Leonard P. Ayres, vice president of the Cleveland Trust Co., told the 400 bank officials here tonight at the seminar session of the Graduate School of Banking being held under the joint auspices of Rutgers University and the American Bankers Association.

"Even with continued business recovery," Col. Ayres said, "and good progress toward budget balancing, and the refunding of most of the short-term Federal debt, the levels of bank interest rates may be expected to continue at low levels intermediate between those now prevailing and those we formerly considered as normal, unless Federal action is taken to reduce excess reserves, or unless prices in general rise far above present levels, and above those that prevailed in the years just before the depression."

The reason for the prevailing low levels of interest rates, Col. Ayres stated, is the existing huge excess reserves of member banks, and a contributing factor operating to keep them low is found in the large volume and slow turnover of demand deposits in the banks.

Reduction of Reserves.

"The volume of excess reserves," Col. Ayres continued, "could be reduced or increased by gold exports or imports, or by various different actions which might be taken by the Federal Reserve authorities, or by the Treasury Department. It is unlikely that there will soon be gold exports of such magnitude as largely to decrease the excess reserves. Moreover, it seems improbable that the Administration and the Federal Reserve authorities will take, or can safely take, the steps that would sharply reduce the excess reserve of banks, and result in materially higher interest rates, until the Government is well on the way towards balancing its budget, and has refunded most of its short-term debt.

"With long continued business improvement, Federal borrowings will presumably be progressively reduced and finally terminated. While those developments are under way, the volume of demand deposits will be continuously increasing as long as deficit financing is being done. This must result in a continued slow rate of turnover of demand deposits despite business recovery."

Reserve Board Amends Rules Covering Loans

Collateral Changes to Be Permitted After Loan Transfer.

By the Associated Press.

Amendments to regulations covering margin requirements for banks, brokers and dealers were announced yesterday by the Federal Reserve Board.

Amending regulation "U," which concerns requirements for banks, the board said any bank may make any loan it sees fit for arbitrage or odd-lot transactions in registered securities.

In another amendment of the same regulation, the board decreed "a bank may accept the transfer of a loan from another bank, or permit the transfer of a loan between borrowers, without following the requirements of this regulation as to the making of a loan, provided the loan is not increased and the collateral for the loan is not changed; and, after such transfer, a bank may permit such withdrawals and substitutions of collateral as the bank might have permitted if it had been the original maker of the loan or had originally made the loan to the new borrower."

Regulation "T," covering brokers and dealers, was amended to permit brokers carrying restricted "special" accounts for correspondent brokers to allow correspondent brokers to make any withdrawal or substitution of collateral which does not create any deficiency in the account.

Under both regulations "T" and "U," stocks have a loan value of 45 per cent of their current market price. In other words, in purchasing on credit, the purchaser must put up 55 per cent of the purchase price in cash.

Swift Holdings In Stockyards Reported Sold

New Company Is Said to Be Purchaser for $10,000,000.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 26.—John De Witt, New York investment banker, announced today that he was negotiating for the purchase of all stockyards holdings of Swift & Co. for transfer ultimately to the United Stockyards Corporation.

The transaction, he said, had not been completed pending settlement of a few details and court approval. The Chicago American, in a copyrighted article, said the packing concern had sold all its holdings to De Witt for approximately $10,000,000, but the banker said he would "rather not mention a figure."

De Witt said he has undertaken the underwriting of securities of the Stockyards Corporation, a new concern incorporated May 15 in Delaware by the Corporation Trust Co., of New York.

An audit of Swift's holdings is being made, he said, and when it is completed a registration statement will be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission preparatory to offering the securities of the new concern to the public.

At the same time financial backers, understood to have interests in the East, will be disclosed with the filing of directors. De Witt said all securities of United stockyards would be offered to the public.

It was understood the offer involves Swift's interests in yards at Fort Worth, Toronto, St. Paul, St. Joseph, Sioux City, and Brighton, Mass. Stock of these propreties has been hel di ntrust since 1921, when a Supreme Court ruling ordered all packing companies to divest themselves of holdings in stockyards companies.

Corn Products Votes A Stock Dividend

New York, June 26 (AP).—Directors of Corn Products Refining Co. today ordered a special distribution to stockholders consisting of 1-25 of a share of the stock of Allied Mills, Inc., on each share of Corn Products common.

Directors also ordered the regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents a share on the common and $1.75 a share on the preferred. The former is payable July 20 and the latter July 15, both to stock of record July 6.

His address will be broadcast over national hook-ups of both the National Broadcasting Co. and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, a Special Correspondent.

Stocks Work Lower Despite Spurt in Rails; Franc Higher; Wheat Lower.

New York, June 26.—If the stock and bond markets were able to find anything in the Democratic platform or in the general political outlook that particularly pleased them, they kept their feelings well hidden. Stocks on a turnover of less than 900,000 shares, the smallest in a week, moved irregularly lower. They were anything but vibrant at all times, and in the long period of comparative activity many brokers reflected with some misgivings on the outlook for their own business, in the light of the SEC's campaign further to suppress and split Wall Street's stock market activities.

Taking some reassurance from the heavy increase—$400,000,000—in the excess reserves of the member banks for the week—the future gold influx and possibly feeling Treasury support, the Government bond section hardened a little. Commodity markets were uncertain. September wheat lost 1⅞ cents at 94⅛ cents a bushel. Rains were reported in some sections of the Western regions.

In stocks the only diversion was that provided by the railroad market early in the final hour. A spurt followed news of a favorable court decision on the labor retirement act, but the affair lasted only a quarter of an hour and did not involve many stocks. It failed to set in motion a general rally. Santa Fe, Central, Southern Pacific and Northern Pacific moved up 1 to 3 points.

Motor and motor accessory stocks had a better day, but gains were mostly fractional. Chrysler was strong from the start. Motor Products and Briggs were the features of the accessory group. Oils were less active. Texas Corporation ran into the lead with a climb of more than a point.

Sugars came forward. A favorite was Fajardo. American Crystal advanced a point. Rubbers hardened. Silvers and coppers were mixed. U. S. Smelting dropped 2 points. Steel continued to look a bit weary, as did the utilities. Telephone sagged. Preferred shares of Electric Power and Engineers Public Service jumped 1 to 5 points. Allied Chemical was buoyant.

Diverse.

Dome Mines was bid up more than 2 points on an extra dividend of $2. Certain-teed Products preferred declined to show a loss on the month of nearly 15 points. Commercial Credit and Commercial Investment Trust rose 1 to 2 points. Greyhound picked up a little. Gillette preferred continued into new low ground for the year.

Operation of the British stabilization fund, possibly helped by our own control, and the restrictive measures taken in France kept the franc at a firm quotation against sterling and dollars. Changes in the general situation obviously were for the worse, with strikes in France growing more vicious and with the government pursuing a course of higher expenditures and cost lifting.

Soundness of the currency, the state of government credit and similar matters probably will be discussed at great length once the Presidential campaign gets under way. They may not be controlling influences in the voting, for the public pays little attention to theory. Serious developments, if they cannot be avoided, are more likely to take place after than before the autumn elections.

Currency Backing.

Meanwhile the effect of the soldiers' bonus payments and the continued influx of gold from Europe are leaving deep marks on the conditions statements of the Federal Reserve System. Currency circulation, as bonus bonds were exchanged for cash, rose this week by $125,000,000 (much less than might have been expected), bringing the circulation medium to a new high record figure of $6,713,000,000. That constitutes in fact an inflation, for the expansion of business activity and rise in commodity prices has by no stretch of the imagination warranted any appreciable increase in currency circulation.

This is a season of moderate currency expansion, which reaches its climax at midyear, but the increase is even deeper than the temporary distribution of the bonus. Much money still is being hoarded, or is kept in hoards. Monetary gold stock increased $57,000,000, with the result that the gold hoardings in the Treasury also are at a new peak—$10,800,00 0on the depreciated dollar valuation.

The field is fertile for the sowing of the old seeds of misrepresentation with respect to the currency's gold backing. The public will be told in impressive fashion that, since the six billions in paper currency are "backed" by ten and a half billions of gold, the currency was never sounder and inflation was never more distant. Those who accept such claptrap should at least bear in mind that the gold backing for our inconvertible currency is, like the Rock of Ages, purely a spiritual concept; it won't be of the slightest use should a real storm of doubt and suspicion assail the soundness of the currency.

Stockyards.

Swift & Co., are about to complete a deal for complying with a court order entered years ago requiring them to dispose (along with Armour & Co.) of their interest in stockyards. Armour already has sold its interest to holding companies in which Philip Armour and others are interested. Buyers of Swift stock are reported to be a Wall Street syndicate, or at any rate a fund of capital with no special interest in the farmers. Divorce of the packing company holdings in stockyards was pressed by professional farm agitators who saw in that control a means of squeezing the stock raiser. At least the packer knew that his interests were connected with those of the stockmen, and he probably was willing to temper the winds to the shorn lambs. Whether a purely investment holding concern will have more tenderness for the stock shipper is highly doubtful.

Poland

The course of inflation and suspension of payments is going strong in Poland. A short time ago an embargo was placed on gold shipments, the country being the first break in recent months in the gold bloc. Logically other steps were taken, and, following Germany's example, no further payments are to be made on Polish external obligations—unless the holder is content to take Polish currency segregated in Poland. This and that will follow that and this, until much of the Polish debt in one form or another will have been marked off. France, many fear, is peering down the same alley with its "cheap money" and budget deficit policy in the face of a determined flight of capital on fear of franc devaluation. Polish bonds broke badly, from 12 to 20 points, under the impact of the interest payment suspension news.

Capital Transit Traffic Highest, Fares Lowest

With the May report of the Capital Transit System filed yesterday with the Public Utilities Commission, J. E. Heberle, vice president and comptroller, sent a letter in which he said:

"There were several records established in the consolidated operations of the Washington Rapid Transit Co. and Capital Transit Co. during May, 1936, that are worthy of notice:

"The average fare in the District of Columbia per revenue passenger was 5.91 cents, and per total passenger 4.37 cents. This establishes a new low for recent years. The total number of passengers carried in the District of Columbia by these companies was 19,810,009, which represents a new high point; as also does the number of car and bus miles operated, 2,410,570 (excluding chartered).

"For the week ended June 13, 1936, during which the merger of the Washington Rapid Transit Co. with Capital Transit Co. was accomplished, 9,913 of the $1.25 passes were purchased, this representing an all-time high for the $1.25 pass."

The company's net income for May this year of $40,220.67 compared with $100,463.37 for the same month last year, a decrease of 80 per cent. Operating revenues were to $46,304.56, up $5,908.09, and operating expenses totaled $38,634.64, an increase of $5,583.82, but not enough to offset the gain in revenues. The net income of $7,669.92 from operations was $324.27 higher than in May, 1935.

Net income for the first five months of 1936 was also reported to the commission, this figure standing at $27,269.31 against $19,745.67 in the like period in 1935, an increase this year of $7,523.64.

Columbus Reports Banking Miracle

Columbus, Ohio, June 26 (AP).—State Banking Department officials rubbed their eyes today, took another look at the liquidation record of the White Oak Valley bank, and concluded that the financial millennium had arrived. The record read:

Claims filed, $80,000; claims paid, $80,000; preferred claims, none; attorneys' fees, none. Assessments against stockholders, none; suits by bank or depositors, none; percentage of payment to depositors, 100; total liquidating expense, $5,000.

The little bank, located at Mowrystown, Highland County, Ohio, closed in October, 1933. President R. G. Rhoten was named as conservator.

New Building Loans Exceed Refinancing

Only 29% of May Lending Was on Account of Old Mortgages.

Loans for new home building by Federal savings and loan associations now for the first time exceed the current volume of lending for refinancing old mortgages, according to reports of activities of 1,006 Federal associations during May.

This trend indicates increased usefulness to their communities of Federal associations in financing new construction, thus stimulating employment in the building trades, and less demand for credit to refund maturing mortgages. It reflects improved economic condition of persons with encumbered properties and a stronger real estate market.

Of the total of $17,890,000 loaned by these institutions during May, 31 per cent was for new home building and only 29 per cent for refinancing. The purchase of existing properties accounted for 29 per cent, and repairs and modernization for 7.7 per cent.

In contrast, during 1935 only 25.5 per cent of the loans were for new construction, and 41.9 per cent for refinancing. The combined net increase of loans on the books of these associations amounted to 3.6 per cent for the month.

Loans by Federal associations are made on a long-term, monthly payment basis, generally for 10 to 15 years.

Culbertson on Bridge

Hoaxed.

The best defense often is totally dependent on the bidding that went before. If the bids were honest, shrewd deductions may be made. If, on the other hand, one or more of them was psychic, a defender's problem may become difficult.

There is only one fair way to criticize the play of a bridge hand. That is to put yourself in the place of a certain player and to ignore the hands which you, as a reader, can see plainly. Imagine that you had no more information to go on than had the East player in today's hand. What would you have done in his position?

*West should have doubled.

North's semi-psychic opening bid was intended to do what it actually did: "talk the opponents out of game." But South, the partner, not being "in on" the situation, continued bidding, with the result that North found himself declarer in a game contract obviously impossible of fulfilment.

I mean, of course, "impossible" from North's angle. Poor East, after he had made the opening lead of the spade king, took a different and darker view of the situation. His own two spade tricks and ace of diamonds were the only tricks actually in sight. He could not know that North's opening bid was psychic. It looked more probable that it had been merely shaded, including two aces, and that West's spade raise consequently had been based on a hand such as:

♠Q J 10 x ♥ x x ♦ x x x ♣ K x x x x.

If this were true, there was only one way to defeat the contract. So East's second play was the ace of diamonds, and his third an underlead of the spade ace. The object was, of course, to put West in with the one card it appeared he might have (the spade queen) so that he could return a diamond for East to ruff.

Imagine the declarer's delight when the second spade lead came up to his queen! Three rounds of hearts ending in the dummy disposed of the adverse trumps and the established diamond suit supplied discards for all of North's losers. Thus the doubled contract actually was fulfilled with an extra trick!

The sad part, from the East-West viewpoint, was (first) that four spades were cold and (second) that the four heart contract could have been defeated three tricks. If East had shifted at the second trick to a low club, the declarer would have been in a bad way. West would win and return the deuce of clubs, which dummy would be forced to ruff. The best play now would be to esablish diamonds. East would win with the ace and return a trump. No declarer would attempt to discard on a high diamond, but East would ruff and lead another club. Eventually declarer would have to concede two more spade tricks.

JUNIOR SALES EXECUTIVE

We have a position for a man between the ages of 24 and 35. We would prefer a college graduate, although this is not absolutely essential, who has been in the business world for about three years and who has not found exactly the work he wants. In any event he must be aggressive and willing to take responsibility. He should be a natural-born go-getter and understand that being boss does not consist of being "bossy." This is not selling, but handling people who do sell. It is with one of the oldest and most reliable of local Washington firms. This is not door-to-door selling. The position carries a good starting salary. Advancement is assured, both in position and earnings, to the man who makes good.

Have your reply typewritten, stating age, education and a very comprehensive and detailed account of your experience and the nature of the work you would like to follow in life. Include any other information which you feel would be of value to us. If your qualifications warrant, an interview will be granted within the next few days. Box 83, Washington Post.

League Change Urged by Chile As Lure to U. S.

Reform Action Is Delayed; Sanctions Move Also Is Postponed.

By the Associated Press.

Geneva, June 26.—A movement to reform the League of Nations so the United States, Japan and Germany would join was laid before the Council by Chile today and referred to the Assembly for action.

The Council itself decided to take no initiative for reform, widely agitated as the result of the failure of sanctions to halt Italy's conquest of Ethiopia. This ticklish question will be handled by the Assembly, convening next Tuesday.

Conflicting viewpoints on the subject were disclosed at the opening session of the Council, reconvened to consider the Italo-Ethiopian situation.

Meanwhile, Haile Selassie, the self-exiled little emperor whose empire was stripped from him, defiantly announced, Ethiopians "will never consent to live under the heel of the aggressor."

The Negus issued this statement from his hotel. He received a great ovation from thousands of residents of Geneva when he arrived from London.

Whether he planned to appear personally to plead his cause before the Council was uncertain.

The proposal to reform the League was made by Manuel Rivas Vicuna, delegate from Chile. He urged that opinions be asked from all nonmember states so Geneva would have a League which is "really universal."

Would War System.

The time has come, he said, to end a system of world war "and it must be permissible for one part of humanity to remain outside disputes, even in the case of a great catastrophe."

The Chilean proposal was referred to the Assembly after Nicholas Titulescu, Rumanian foreign minister, opposed a movement for reformation.

"It is humanity which must be reformed," he asserted. "The world situation is disturbed, full of threats of war. This is not the time to disarm the League of Nations."

The atmosphere of the session nevertheless distinctly hinted of some kind of revision as a result of the failure of sanctions to halt Italy's campaign in Africa. Maxim Litvinoff, Russian delegate, insisted the Covenant must be strengthened.

The crumbling of sanctions was further manifested when Poland announced she is discontinuing them. Uruguay also urged the abandonment of sanctions and said she is prepared to consider reforms "that may be proposed with the object of adapting the Covenant to the present realities of international life."

Italy is not represented at the Council session, although Ethiopia is. Emperor Haile Selassie did not attend the private session late today.

The Council probably will refer the sanctions question to a committee for study, leaving it up to individual nations to drop sanctions. In this manner the question would be brought before the Assembly only through a general resolution condemning acquisition of territory by force without mentioning Italy.

Parades As Negus.

Geneva's police and public were fooled when a Geneva youth who is a Fascist masqueraded as Haile Selassie.

Dressed and made up as the Negus, he not only deposited a wreath at the base of a monument but later motored to the League palace, where he was saluted by the police guard, attaches and even officials.

In view of Italy's absence, the Council approved the suggestion of Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, that he consult members on the proper moment to take up the Locarno question.

Blum to Offer Plan.

Copyright, 1936, by United Press.

Paris, June 26.—Premier Leon Blum will motor to Geneva tomorrow to propose convocation of a committee to study the possibilities of a United States of Europe," formed along the lines suggested by Aristide Briand years ago, it was learned tonight.

The union would be open to all European members of the League of Nations and also to Germany.

This development followed closely on the heels of a French appeal to Germany to seek clairification of their misunderstandings by a conscientious effort to settle all outstanding differences either through diplomatic channels or direct conversations, preferably at Geneva.

France's initiative toward formation of a union at Geneva will be chiefly in corridor conversations where Blum and Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos will sound out other European foreign ministers and diplomats to determine their reaction to the French proposal.

When Briand laid down his plan for a "United States of Europe," he had peace in mind, but his action was purely political, it was said. Now, however, politics have been shoved into second place, and Blum is expected to advance economic and commercial arguments to convince other nations of the advisability of such a union.

existence by dabbling in other affairs."

The League has nothing more to do Forster declaration says, because Reichsfuehrer Hitler of Germany has settled directly with Poland the questions which, prior to the Nazi advent, the League could not settle.

Lester is blamed for the recent killing of Storm Troopers through the protection of opposition parties.

"The high commissioner seizes every occasion to block the efforts of the national Socialist government and to help the opposition.

"He thereby does not contribute to the pacification of Danzig. As the Hitler movement without the high commissioner came to a quiet understanding with Poland, thereby creating external peace, so will the Hitler movement know how to establish internal peace without the high commissioner.

"The high commissioner can do what he will but he must let us ntaional Socialists alone.

"We will show him we are in a position to make peace at home and abroad."

Refortification Reported.

Copenhagen, June 26 (AP).—A usually informed source declared tonight refortification of Helgoland, a German island in the North Sea near which one of the major naval battles of the World War was fought, had been begun.

Forts manned by big guns have been built into the rock on the west coast, this source stated, and the east coast is armed with anti-aircraft guns.

10,000 Seize French Yards In New Strike

Ship Workers Walk Out as Split Appears in Blum's Leftist Regime.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, June 26.—Naval shipyards at St. Nazaire were occupied by strikers under red flags tonight as crews which had held merchant ships in Marseille went back to work.

Premier Leon Blum's new Socialist government ran into difficulties in the Chamber of Deputies with a split beginning to show in the leftist "People's Front," which placed him in power.

Ridicules Charges.

Deputy Raymond Vidal, Socialist assistant mayor of Marseille, ridiculed the government's suggestion that followers of Leon Trotsky, famous Red in exile from Russia, were responsible for strike disturbances, asserting they were too few in number.

(A newspaper allegedly owned by Trotsky was raided in Paris last week.)

"I believe," said Vidal, "instead that we are witnessing an attempted revolution. Our Communist friends want a Communist republic of Soviets. As for me, I will not go along with them."

Vidal's attack led a fellow Socialist, Roger Salengro, minister of the interior, to defend the Communists. He said they had urged Marseille workers to end strikes and added that the number of strikers in France, recently near 1,000,000, now is "only 165,000."

Wheat Board Opposed.

Radical Socialist opposition to the government's wheat board bill developed. A delegation from this powerful party, hitherto supporting Blum, told him they objected to financing the board with the nation's budget deficit growing.

Strikers in naval shipyards stopped work on new vessels for the French navy, occupying the yards after running up red flags. About 10,000 employes in five yards struck, demanding pay boosts and a 40-hour week.

Marseille seamen returned to their jobs after a five-day walkout, during which they occupied virtually every ship in the harbor. They won their demands from the shipowners.

Gold Returns to Country.

Vincent Auriol, minister of finance, told the chamber 65,000,000 francs ($4,290,000) worth of gold had returned to France since a government bill to penalize secret exporters of capital was announced last week. This measure was passed unanimously by the chamber today.

A bill providing for nationalization of war industries by decree was approved by the cabinet and will be submitted to the chamber. The cabinet also approved a large public works program measure.

British Sentence Two For Spying in Malta

Valetta, Malta, June 26 (AP).—Two citizens of Malta were sentenced to three years' imprisonment today under conviction of espionage. Three judges, sitting in camera, decided Nicolo Delia, Nationalist lawyer, and Joseph Flores, tobacconist, were guilty of trying to obtain secret information calculated to prove useful to an enemy.

One of the features of the trial was a written declaration, attributed to Delia, in which he implicated the Italian consul general who, it was stated, asked Delia to obtain secret information concerning the British navy dockyards. Delia and Flores were alleged to have become nervous and subsequently to have refused their services.

Catholic Heads Attack Mexico's Church Policy

Pastoral Letter Declares Campaign of Hatred Is Gaining in Intensity.

By the United Press.

Mexico City, June 26.—The Roman Catholic Church today renewed its attack on alleged interference of the administration of President Lazaro Cardenas in the free exercise of religious worship in Mexico.

In a pastoral letter addressed to all workers and peasants, the episcopate, headed by Archbishop Leopoldo Ruiz y Flores, now in exile in San Antonio, Tex., declared:

"The campaign of hatred against Christ our Lord and our church has been intensified with fury. The old anti-religious leaders have been substituted by even more exalted onse who profess doctrines and measures destructive to order and well being."

The letter was the first criticism of the government since the death on May 19 of Archbishop Pascual Diaz y Barreto, primate of Mexico and for years the central figure in the church-state conflict.

Indirect Attack.

An indirect attack on the labor and agrarian policies of the administration was seen in the letter, which said:

"They tell you religion is opium which the rich people and priests give the people in order not to seek their social, economic and moral uplift. The doctrines of communism have been presented to you as if they constituted the truths. You have been promised implantation of a regime which will transform all land into a delightful paradise in which poverty and class distinctions will be abolished."

The episcopate said Catholicism advocates just wages and opposes treating labor as a commodity. It favors labor organizations, the archbishops said, but the Mexican agrarian legislation was declared contrary to the doctrine of Pope Leo XIII, who said it was necessary that there be many proprietors.

Called Failure.

The system of agrarian communities known as "ejidos" (state land grants) now being created by the government was pronounced a failure by the pastoral document.

"A member of an ejido is now a land owner," the letter said. "He lives in constant fear that through intrigue, violence or political change the land assigned to him will be snatched away. They sought to obtain emancipation for the peasant, but in reality he is submerged in the horrors of political intrigue in conditions approximating slavery."

Charging that the doctrines of liberalism, communism and socialism all have failed, the letter cited the late Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, of Austria, and Premier Aontinio de Oliveira Salazar, of Portugal, as examples of heads of government furnished by Catholicism.

Lindbergh to Show Heart Pump Device

Copenhagen, June 26 (AP).—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh and his coworker in science, Dr. Alexis Carrel, today accepted an invitation to demonstrate personaly their artificial heart apparatus to the Scientific Congress meeting here August 10.

Col. Lindbergh, working in cooperation with Dr. Carrel, famous brain specialist, made an artificial heart and lungs at the Rockefeller Institute, New York, successfully concluding a century-long quest of scientists to find a way to make parts of the body live indefinitely and even grow in glass chambers, where they are placed and revived after surgical death.

Dr. Carrel already had won the Nobel Prize for similar work in making "tissues" live under glass, but the Lindbergh achievement, which was announced June 20, 1935, in Scientific Magazine, had nothing to do with the old tissue culture.
